DIDN'T GET THE SITUATION

Flight of Eloquence Wasted by Friend of Dobkins—Pretty Enough, But Not Appropriate.

"What makes you act so grouchy this morning, Dobkins?"

"Had an addition to my family."

"What? Why, you ought to be ashamed to be gloomy over that! To think that a normal human being should be angry because of the advent of such a cherub! Do you actually grudge a place in your happy home to an innocent creature fresh from heaven, bringing with it the very fragrance of those celestial realms? Do you greet with an unwelcoming chill a small epitome of all purity and sweetness given into your keeping as a priceless, though undeserved treasure by a too benevolent Providence? A lovely copy of what fancy feigns the angels to be like—a tiny shred of grace and glory, snatched from the—"

"Say, that's very pretty, but do you know you're talking about my mother-in-law?"

EDWARD VII. DEAD; GEORGE V. RULES

Universally Lamented Monarch Succumbs to Pneumonia.

WHOLE NATION IN MOURNING

Monarch's Death Occurred Before Subjects Had Realized That He Was Seriously Ill—Sketch of His Long and Brilliant Career.

Edward VII., king of the United Kingdom of Great Britain and Ireland, and of all the British Dominions beyond the Seas, emperor of India, as his full royal title reads, was born in Buckingham palace, London, on November 9, 1841, and was the second child and first son of Queen Victoria and the Prince Consort Albert. He was christened Albert Edward, and at his very birth was given an imposing list of titles. He was at once created prince of Wales and by virtue of that dignity he became also knight of the garter. As heir apparent to the British throne he succeeded to the title of duke of Cornwall and its emoluments, and as heir to the crown of Scotland he became great steward of Scotland, duke of Rothesay, earl of Carrick, baron of Renfrew and lord of the isles. On September 10, 1849, he was created earl of Dublin, this title being conferred on him and his heirs in perpetuity. Among the other titles and commands held by Edward were duke of Saxony, colonel of the Tenth hussars, colonel-in-chief of the Rifle brigade, field marshal of the British army and field marshal of the German army.

her a popularity in Great Britain that has continued unlessened throughout her life as princess and queen. In 1875-76 the prince made an extended tour through the Indian empire and was received everywhere with lavish and magnificent hospitality.

On the death of Queen Victoria, January 22, 1901, Edward succeeded to the throne. The coronation was set for June 26, 1902, and all preparations for the magnificent event had been completed when disquieting rumors of the king's ill health, which had been current for several days, were confirmed by the postponement of the ceremony. It was announced that the king was suffering from perityphlitis, and on June 24 he underwent an operation. After some weeks of the greatest anxiety he recovered, and the coronation took place August 9.

During the long years of his princehood Edward's public duties consisted solely in the office of representing the royal family at all manner of public events, and he performed these duties well. But the deadly monotony of such a life was too much for the vigorous man, and he found relaxation in amusements that frequently gave rise to scandals and that gave the world a wrong impression of his real character. He was especially fond of the theater and among his boon companions for years were actresses and actors. Also he developed a great liking for Paris and often visited that gay capital incognito.

But all this, as has been said, was only his relaxation, and after coming to the throne his conduct always was so circumspect that not the most captious critic could find any fault with it.

As a diplomat Edward was unexcelled among the monarchs of Europe. His influence was always thrown to the side of international peace where compatible with national honor, and his advice and example had a steadying effect on all Europe. He looked with amused tolerance on the vagaries and extravagances of his nephew, the emperor of Germany, but occasionally that ruler exasperated him to such an extent that he could not refrain from giving him some stern advice. Such admonition was not received by William in a submissive spirit, and once in a while there were sensational rumors that the peaceful relations between the two countries were about to be ruptured.

The development of the king's character in his later years was especially gratifying to the nation. In addition to the love of his people, which he had always had, he gained their admiration and respect. They had the utmost confidence in his good judgment, as was amply exemplified during the late crisis over the budget, and they were always sure he would do the right thing at the right time.

To Edward and Alexandra were born six children. The first, Prince Albert, duke of Clarence, died in 1892, aged twenty-eight years. The second, George Frederick Ernest Albert, born on June 3, 1865, succeeds to the throne. The other children are: Princess Louisa Victoria, married to the duke of Fife; Princess Victoria Alexandra; Princess Maude Charlotte, married to Prince Charles of Denmark, and Prince Alexander John, who died the day after his birth in 1871.

The prince received a most elaborate, broad and carefully planned education. At first he was under the charge of four private tutors, and subsequently his education was directed Kingsley. In order to give him a taste of college life, he was sent for by Baron Stockmar and Charles one session to the University of Edinburgh, for one year to Oxford and for four terms to Cambridge. During these years he acquired a wide general knowledge of the arts and sciences and became quite proficient in modern languages.

In 1860 the prince made a tour of the United States and Canada and the next year he joined the British army at Curragh camp, Ireland. In 1862 he set out on his travels again, this time visiting Jerusalem and other places of biblical interest. His companion on the trip was Dean Stanley of Westminster.

Edward's public life began in February, 1863, when, as heir to the throne, he took his seat in the house of lords. On March 10 of the same year he married Princess Alexandra Caroline Mary Charlotte Louise Julia, the eldest daughter of King Christian IX. of Denmark. Her beauty, grace and charming manners at once gave

WESTERN CANADA

What Prof. Shaw, the Well-Known Agriculturist, Says About It:

"I would sooner raise cattle in Western Canada than in the corn belt of the United States. Feed is cheaper and climate better for the purpose. Your market will improve faster than ours. Your farmers will produce supplies. Wheat can be grown up to the 60th parallel [800 miles north of the International boundary]. Your vacant lands will be taken at a price beyond present conception. We have enough people in the United States alone who want homes to take up this land."

70,000 Americans will enter and make their homes in Western Canada this year. 1909 produced another crop of wheat, oats and barley in addition to which the cattle exports was an immense sum. Cattle raising, dairying, mixed farming and grain growing in the provinces of Manitoba, Saskatchewan and Alberta.

Free homestead and pre-emption areas, as well as lands for sale by railway and land companies provide homes for millions. Adaptable soil, healthful climate, splendid schools and churches, and good railways.

HUNDREDS DIED IN QUAKE

Every House and Building of Cartago, Including Peace Palace, Were Destroyed.

San Jose, Costa Rica, May 9.—The list of dead at Cartago now numbers not less than 1,500. The city was destroyed Wednesday by an earthquake which lasted four seconds. It was a tremendous movement, following a few minor shocks during the course of the day. No one had time to run out of the houses which fell crashing to the streets. Had the great shock come during the sleeping hourse hardly any could have escaped.

Every house and building was totally destroyed, including the palace of the American peace court, the gift of Andrew Carnegie. Some Americans are reported to have been killed, but identifiication, even by the records, is at present impossible. The foreign colonists set about at once to rescue those pinned down by the wreckage.

"Uncle Joe" Celebrates.

Washington, D. C., May 9.—Speaker Cannon was 74 years old Saturday. His rooms across the corridor from the floor of the house were decorated with flowers, the gifts of political and personal friends, and all day he smilingly received congratulations. The speaker was in one of his happiest and merriest moods. The Illinois delegation presented him with a huge bouquet of American beauty roses, 74 in all, or one for each year of his life.

"There is no worse vice than frankness," said Booth Tarkington, at a farewell dinner in New York precedent to his departure for Europe. "How should I feel, for example, if I asked you for your opinion of my plays, and you answered me frankly, quite frankly?

"Why, I should feel like the poor lady at the bridge drive who said to her hostess' little daughter:

"'Your eyes are such a heavenly blue. And what color are my eyes, darling?'

STOMACH LIVER LUNGS

Each of the chief organs of the body is a link in the Chain of Life. A chain is no stronger than its weakest link, the body no stronger than its weakest organ. If there is weakness of stomach, liver or lungs, there is a weak link in the chain of life which may snap at any time. Often this so-called "weakness" is caused by lack of nutrition, the result of weakness or disease of the stomach and other organs of digestion and nutrition. Diseases and weaknesses of the stomach and its allied organs are cured by the use of Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery. When the weak or diseased stomach is cured, diseases of other organs which seem remote from the stomach but which have their origin in a diseased condition of the stomach and other organs of digestion and nutrition, are cured also.

The strong man has a strong stomach. Take the above recommended "Discovery" and you may have a strong stomach and a strong body.

THE SOLAR SYSTEM AND HALLEY'S COMET

BY G. I. SCHAPER

"God moves in a mysterious way
His wonders to perform;
He plants His foot-steps in the sea,
And rides upon the storm."

Halley's Comet, the rare visitor, after 75 years of oblivion, is within our orbit once more, having been sighted in September, 1909, at which time it was about 300,000,000 miles away. Since that time it has been constantly approaching the sun until the 19th day of last April when it reached its nearest approach to the same—about 54,000,000 miles. On February 3rd the comet's tail was estimated as 5,000.000 miles in length and conditions are apparently favorable for a prodigious development of that appendage before the 18th day of May, the day the comet will be directly between the earth and the sun.

Whenever comets encircle the sun they apparently become set on fire anew and depart from thence a boiling, fuming, blasting, exploding mass with a very much enlarged tail. It should therefore be no occasion for surprise or alarm if Halley's Comet should bave a tail 30,000,000 miles long by the 18 h day of May.

Inasmuch as the tails of comets point away from the sun and Halley's Comet will be directly between us and the sun on May 18th, the earth will necessarily have to be in the comet's tail if it is more than 14,300,000 miles long, which is the distance the comet will be from the earth on that day.

This topic, however, will be taken up later in this article.

The head of Halley's Comet is about 50 times as large as the earth The writer desires to state here that this is the third PREDICTED return of this comet to the sun but there are several accounts of its having visited the sun on many previous occasions. At the time of its appearance in 1682, methods of computing their paths through the regions of space had been devised by astronomers, and Halley availed himself of these methods and applied them to the compuration of the orbits of comets which had previously been mentioned in history. In this way he found that comets which appeared in 1378. 1456, 1531, 1607 and 1682 were one and the same comet. having a periodic time of about 76 years, and he then made the prediction that it would again appear about the year 1758 or 1759, a prediction which was in due time confirmed by observation.

The comet is now nearer the sun than our earth is and furthermore is traveling over such a part of its orbit as in the near future will bring it between the earth and the sun. At this writing, May 6th, the comet is still from fifty to sixty-five million miles away, but is traveling toward us at the rate of about 100,000 miles per hour, and the earth is traveling toward the comet at the rate of about 68,000 miles per hour. Therefore each morning when we view it we should try to conclude that it is about 4,000,000 miles closer to us than it was the previous morning. It will continue to appear larger and brighter each morning until the 17th day of May, when if the sky should be clear it will present a magnificent sight during early morning hours. It rises at 2:32 on this morning.

From 17th to 20th of this month it will become lost in the sun's rays, and may not be visible to the naked eye. Possibly we can see it by looking through smoked glass. On and after the 20th it will be visible in the west in the evening and will present the same magnificent appearance there that it previously presented in the east but will fade away by the latter part of the month.

What will happen if the tail should be more than 14,300,000 miles long and we should pass through it some time during the day or night of May 18? First let us see what the astronomers say the head and tail of the comet consists of. The head they say consists of carbon and sodium and the tail consisto of sunlight, comet-light, reflected light, gas, metalic vapor and meteors. What would it mean for our earth to plunge through these substances at a rate of 168,000 miles per hour? The light will not harm us and the gas and vapor could not penetrate our atmosphere, for it weighs 15 pounds to the square inch at the surface of the earth. The meteors might present a wonderful appearance when our atmosphere burns them up, but would probably be as harmless as other meteoric showers the earth has experienced.

Owing to misunderstandings between astronomers and newspaper reporters as to the different hours of standard time as well as the question of whether the Pacific Ocean has the 18TH first or the civilized nations, different times have been given as the time of the eclipse or transit of the earth through the comet's tail. IT is however now generally accepted that it will take place at 10 o'clock p. m. May 18 by our TIME. This would mean the TOTALITY of THE eclipse or the time when we would be half way THROUGH the tail. Therefore if there is to be any display of any sort we should see it between 8:00 p. m. and midnight. Please watch the papers for any change the final calculations might make in the time, or call the writer by phone on the evening of the 17TH.

May the observations we intend to make in the near future of this heavly body, as well as what we may read and hear, help us to concieve a greater and better idea of the magnificence and granduer of this glorious spectacle in the Almighty's Creation—Halley's Comet.

GENERAL NEWS.

A press dispatch from Washington announced that John D. Rockefeller had abandoned the idea of securing a national charter for his proposed foundation. Starr J. Murphy, personal counsel for Mr. Rockefeller, and speaking for the Standard Oil president, said the statement was entirely without foundation. Mr. Murphy also said that Mr. Rockefeller had nothing to do with the "Economic and General Foundation," for which a charter is being sought from the New York legislature for "an aged man of wealth," said to have $2,500,000 to spend on charity.

Edward VII., king of Great Britain and Ireland and emperor of India, is dead. His illness, which lasted less than a week, became serious only three days ago. The king returned to England from a vacation on the continent ten days ago in the best of health. He had reigned nine years. He was sixty-nine years old. The Prince of Wales succeeded to the crown immediately, according to the laws of the kingdom, without official ceremony. He will take the oath of office before the privy council and will be proclaimed king as George V. His first official act was to dispatch to the lord mayor the announcement of his father's death, in pursuance of custom.

More than half of the male population of Palos, Ala., is believed to have perished as the result of the explosion in mine No. 3 of the Palos Coal and Coke company. About 200 men—45 white and 150 negroes—are thought to have been killed. Eleven bodies have been found.

Representative Lee O'Neil Browne of Ottawa, Ill., Democratic leader of the lower house of the legislature, was indicted by the special grand jury at Chicago on a charge of bribing Charles A. White, Democratic member from O'Fallon, Ill., to vote for William Lorimer for United States senator. The specific charge mentioned in each of the 11 counts of the indictment is that Browne paid White $850 at the Briggs house, in Chicago, on June 16, 1909, as part of a total bribe of $1,000. At the same time the grand jury returned indictments charging perjury against Representative Robert E. Wilson of Chicago and Michael S. Link of Mitchell. They are accused of having perjured themselves in testifying before the grand jury that they had not participated in the alleged "jack-pot" distribution at St. Louis, which was one of the features of the White "confession" on which the Browne indictment is based.

The horror of the great earthquake at Cartago, Costa Rica, is growing by leaps and bounds. The loss of life, at first estimated at 500, is now placed, according to the latest news from the ruined city, at not less than 1,000, and it may largely exceed that figure. Hundreds were seriously injured in the collapse of buildings. The property loss will amount to many millions of dollars.

William Randolph Hearst entered suit in the federal court against Henry Watterson individually, for $100,000, and the Courier-Journal for the same sum. The suit against Mr. Watterson is based on his editorial which, according to the petition, applauded the attack made on Mr. Hearst by Mayor Gaynor at the Press banquet in New York and "accepting as proven Gaynor's charges."

Fire, caused by an older child playing with matches, resulted in the loss of two lives at Deimling, Mich. The home of Matt Servis was destroyed and a three-year-old girl and an infant were burned to death. The parents were absent.

Two companies of the state militia at Danville and Champaign were ordered to Danville, Ill., by Governor Deneen at the request of the sheriff of Vermillion county to assist that official in maintaining order in the Danville mining district.

The story of Representative Charles A. White that he was paid $1,000 for voting for William Lorimer for United States senator and that later he received $900 as his share of a general corruption fund or "jack pot" was corroborated before the special grand jury by Representative H. J. C. Beckemeyer of Carlyle.

A large part of Cartago, Costa Rica, was destroyed by a powerful seismic movement. Details are very meager, as the telegraph wires have been leveled between San Jose and Cartago. The operators at the latter place were killed. Five hundred persons are dead and fully as many are wounded. Half the houses in the city have been destroyed. Hundreds of men, women and children are homeless.

Forty-five white men and 90 negroes are entombed in No. 3 coal mine at Palos, Ala., as the result of an explosion. All hope for the entombed men has been abandoned. It is thought that any who escaped the explosion, which is believed to have been caused by gas and dust, have been suffocated by black damp.

"It was not a fair or truthful statement," exclaimed Secretary Ballinger during the Ballinger-Pinchot investigation, referring to a sentence in former Secretary Garfield's letter to the president last November, which read: "He (Ballinger) directed the reclamation service to prepare lists for restoring the withdrawn lands, but to do so slowly in order not to attract public attention."

Striking employes of the Columbus (O.) Railway and Light company voted to accept an agreement for peace proposed by Mayor Marshall, under which four discharged union men are to be given the option of returning to work at wages equivalent to their former pay or accepting employment under the city administration.

President Taft gave a vigorous denunciation of William J. Bryan for the letters of criticism of the appointment of Gov. Charles E. Hughes of New York as associate justice of the United States Supreme court. Mr. Taft decried the "cant of the demagogue" and the "disposition of public journals" to make unjust charges against men in public life. "All I am speaking for is justice and a square deal," he said, "not especially for myself, for, indeed, I am in a position where I can get along better than some of the rest without it. But I am appealing for justice in dealing with all classes." Mr. Taft was speaking at a luncheon given by the Business Men's league in St. Louis.

COLONEL DAVID J. PALMER

Farmer and Soldier of the Civil War With a Remarkable Record.

One of the most picturesque figures in the Iowa republican primary, June 7th, is Col. David J. Palmer, an old soldier who seeks nomination for re-election to the office of Railroad Commissioner, which he has efficiently held for several years and of which board he is now Chairman. Mr. Palmer, who is by occupation a farmer at Washington, Iowa, is one of the oldest soldiers of the Civil War, with a remarkable record. He was with General Grant at the siege of Vicksburg and in the Chattanooga campaign; through the Atlanta campaign; marched with Sherman to the sea and up through the Carolinas, resulting in the capture of Columbia, South Carolina; and was in the grand review in the city of Washington, at the close of the war before President Andrew Johnson, who succeeded to the presidency at Lincoln's death; Secretary Stanton; General Grant; General Sherman, and others. After this review he was mustered out, May 24, 1865. He enlisted on July 10, 1861, in Company C, Eighth Iowa Volunteer Infantry. At the battle of Shiloh, on April 6, 1862, he was severely wounded in the left breast and left for dead on the field of battle. During the second day's fighting he succeeded in crawling from the rebel camp back through the northern lines where he was given surgical treatment and as soon as possible was sent to his home. When the Twenty-fifth Iowa Volunteer Infantry was organized and mustered in at Mt. Pleasant, Iowa, September 27, 1862, Mr. Palmer, who had organized a company at his home town, while his arm was still in the sling, was elected captain of Company A and returned to service. He was promoted to lieutenant-colonel of the regiment on June 9, 1863, at the siege of Vicksburg. Since the war, Mr. Palmer, while devoting his time to farming, has served the state in the capacity of State Senator in four General Assemblies and as Railroad Commissioner for a number of years.

IOWA GIRL FOUNDS A BANK

Mason City.—Carrying the money as she collected it in her stocking, Mrs. Ilma Franchere-Roach, a former Mason City girl, who recently married Joseph Roach and with him went to live on a claim in South Dakota, with the aid of her husband has founded a bank at Faith, S. D., a new town in the newest part of the state. Her husband, who for some years here, was attached to the First National bank, and since with the First National bank at Mitchell, S. D., decided to be first on the ground with a bank in the town of probably 100 people.

Mrs. Roach, who is a young lady of considerable energy, on a pony, started out to make a canvass of the farmers and claimholders settled in the vicinity and before night came home with $1,000 in cash which she had tucked in her stocking as she had collected it. With this as a nucleus for the deposits of the bank, the First Bank of Faith started. Faith is now some fifty miles from a railroad, but the line is surveyed through that section and Mr. and Mrs. Roach's farm happened to be the one selected by the road promoters for the site of the proposed town. The farm in part was laid out in town lots and at present there are thirty shacks with sixteen more in the course of erection.

Mrs. Roach is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. N. F. Frainchere, for years residents of this city. Her sister, Miss Lucile, is a talented violinist.

BIG MISSION RALLY

LAYMEN'S CONGRESS IN CHICAGO ATTENDED BY THOUSANDS.

WOULD CHRISTIANIZE WORLD

Every Protestant Church In America Represented at Immense Meeting Which Is Addressed by Many Eminent Men.

Chicago.—For four days, beginning May 3, Chicago was the scene of a most extraordinary gathering, the Layman's National Missionary congress. Every Protestant church in America was represented, and the delegates were men of affairs from all over the country who came here to consider plans for the evangelization of the entire world. They numbered 4,500 in all.

Among them were men of national and international prominence. Former Vice-President Fairbanks attended as a representative of the Methodist Episcopal church. Several governors were present. United States Senators Dolliver of Iowa and Beveridge of Indiana and former Senator Teller of Colorado were present at the first session. A number of former governors of states were registered. Among them were former Governor Hadley of Missouri, former Governor Yates of Illinois, and former Governor Hanley of Indiana. Soldiers, sailors, business men, professional men and ministers were in attendance. The congress closed on Friday.

Close of Remarkable Campaign.

This convention marked the close of a remarkable religious campaign. During the winter and spring, missionary conventions were held under the auspices of the Laymen's Missionary Movement in 75 of the leading cities of the country. The campaign began at Buffalo on October 16. The gathering at Chicago was the climax of the series of conventions.

The appeal for foreign missions was presented to the business men of these cities. All told, 83,000 business men registered as delegates for 75 conventions, paying a dollar for the privilege. In addition, thousands of other men attended the various sessions.

Each convention opened with a banquet. In most every case these banquets were the largest in the history of the cities. All of these cities and hundreds of the surrounding towns were represented at the Chicago congress.

A national missionary policy was adopted. This policy will be sent to the World's Missionary conference at Edinburgh, Scotland, on June 14, where it is expected to exert a profound conference. The delegates were apportioned amongst the various Protestant churches of America in accordance with their membership and gifts to missions. The Methodist Episcopal church led with 600 delegates. The Presbyterian church was second with 450 men. The The Northern Baptist church had a quota of 330 men, while the Southern Baptist convention sent 200 men. The Southern Methodist church was represented by by 255 men. The Protestant Episcopal church appointed 210 delegates. Most of the other churches had proportionate representation.

The various sessions were held in the auditorium. The congress opened with the singing of "Crown Him Lord of All." Right Reverend Charles P. Anderson, Episcopal bishop of Chicago, made the opening address. He spoke on the "Will of Christ for the World," dwelling upon the need of church unity. Bishop W. L. McDowell, of the Methodist Episcopal church, made the second address. The first evening was devoted to talks by J. Campbell White, general secretary of the Laymen's Missionary Movement, and J. A. MacDonald, editor of The Toronto Globe.

Notable List of Speakers.

Among the speakers on the program were Prince T. H. Yun of Korea; J. A. MacDonald, editor of the Toronto Globe; Robert E. Speer, secretary of the Presbyterian Board of Foreign Missions; William J. Schiefelin, president of the Ctizens' union of New York; Alfred E. Marling of New York; Mornay Williams, chairman of the New York state board of charities; Clement Chase of Omaha; Howard A. Kelly of Baltimore; Samuel B. Capen of Boston; John R. Pepper of Memphis, Tenn.; H. M. Beardsley, formerly mayor of Kansas City; George Sherwood Eddy of India, Robert H. Gardiner of Boston; Col. Sleman of Washington, founder of the movement; William E. Sweet of Denver, Charles A. Rowland of Athens, Ga.; Alfred E. Marling of New York, Judge Selden P. Spencer of St. Louis, N. W. Rowell of Montreal, John R. Pepper of Memphis, and missionaries from all over the world.

"I didn't quite catch what the guide said," replied the old lady. "Oh, Mr. Guide, won't you kindly tell us what it says on that building?"

"Def-en-dum!" roared the guide through his megaphone, dividing the word into three sections.

"That's what it is," said the old lady. "A deaf and dumb asylum."

The LITTLE BROWN JUG at KILDARE

SYNOPSIS.

Thomas Ardmore, bored millionaire, and Henry Maine Griswold, professor in the University of Virginia, take trains out of Atlanta. Griswold to his college, Ardmore in pursuit of a girl who had winked at him. Mistaken for Gov. Osborne of South Carolina, Griswold's life is threatened. He goes to Columbia to warn the governor and meets Barbara Osborne. Ardmore learns that his winking lady is the daughter of Gov. Dangerfield of North Carolina. He follows her to Raleigh and on the way is given a brown jug at Kildare. In Raleigh he discovers that the jug bears a message threatening Dangerfield unless Appleweight, a criminal, is allowed to go free. Ardmore becomes allied with Jerry Dangerfield in running the affairs of the state in the absence of the governor. A scathing telegram is sent to Gov. Osborne. Griswold becomes adviser to Barbara Osborne, who is attending to her father's duties in South Carolina. Orders are sent to the sheriff to capture Appleweight. Valuable papers are missing from Gov. Osborne's office. Griswold places the theft at the door of the attorney general.

He had opened an atlas and was poring over it with a magnifying glass.

"It's positively funny," he murmured, laughing a little to himself, "but I know something about this country over here. Here's Ardsley, in the far corner of Dilwell county, and there's Kildare."

"Yes; I understand maps. Dilwell is green, and there's the state line and that ugly watery sort of yellow is Mingo county, South Carolina, and Turner Court House is the county seat of it. Those little black marks are hills on the border, and it's right here that these Appleweight people live, and dance on the state line as though it were a skipping-rope."

"That's exactly it. Now what we want to do is to arrest Appleweight and put him in jail in South Carolina, which relieves the governor of North Carolina, your honored father, of all embarrassment."

She snatched the paper-cutter and took possession of the map for a moment, then pointed, with a happy little laugh.

"Why, that will be only too easy. You see there's Azbell county, where the militia is encamped, just three counties away from Dilwell, and if we needed the soldiers it wouldn't hurt the troops to march that far, would it?"

"Hurt them, nothing!" exclaimed Ardmore. "It will be good for them. You have to give orders to the adjutant general, and, being engaged to him, he would be afraid not to obey your orders, even if you told him to go in balloons."

"Well, of course, I'd send him an official order; and if he was disobedient I could break our engagement."

It would have interested Ardmore to know the total of Miss Dangerfield's engagements, but the time did not seem propitious for such inquiries; and, moreover, his awe of her as a young person of great determination and force of character increased.

"Well, there's the map, and there's that insulting telegram; what are you going to do about it?" asked Jerry.

She seemed to be honestly inviting suggestions, and the very thought of this affected him like wine. He deliberated for several minutes, while she watched him. A delicious country quiet lay upon the old statehouse; in the tranquil park outside the birds whistled their high disdain of law and precedent.

"A governor," he began, "is always a dignified person who doesn't bother his head about little things like this unless everybody else has gone to sleep. Now, who's the chief of police in a county like Dilwell—what do you call him?"

"Do you mean the sheriff, Mr. Ardmore?"

"Certainly. Now, give me those telegraph blanks, and I'll drop him a few lines to let him know that the government at Raleigh still lives."

It is in the telegram alone that we Americans approach style. Our great commanders did much to form it; our business strategists took the key from them. Telegrams were, however, with Mr. Thomas Ardmore, something more than a form of communication or a mere literary exercise. Letter-writing seemed to him the most formidable of human undertakings, but with a pad of telegraph blanks under his hand his spirit soared free. All untrammeled by the horror of the day tariff, whose steep slopes have wrought so much confusion and error among the economical, he gave to the wires and the wireless what he never would have confided to a stamp. He wrote and submitted to Miss Jerry Dangerfield the following:

To the Sheriff of Dilwell County,
Kildare, N. C.:

What is this I hear about your inability to catch Appleweight and the rest of his bunch? Your inattention to your duties is a matter of common scandal, and if you don't get anxious pretty soon I shall remove you from your job and then some. I shall be down soon to see whether you are pitching quoits at the blacksmith shop or fishing for lobsters in Raccoon creek, instead of attending to your knitting. Your conduct has annoyed me until I am something more than vexed by your behavior. The eyes of the great North State are upon you. Wire me at length just what you propose doing or not doing in this matter.

WILLIAM DANGERFIELD,
Governor of North Carolina.

"What do you think of that?" he asked, his pride falling as she scanned the paper carefully.

"Isn't it pretty expensive?" Jerry inquired, counting the words to ten and then roughly computing the rest.

"I'll take care of that, Miss Dangerfield. What I want to know is whether you think that will make the sheriff sit up."

"Well, here's what father sent him only about a week ago. I found it in his private letter book, and it's marked confidential in red ink."

She read:

Act cautiously in Appleweight case. Indictment by grand jury is undoubtedly faulty and Foster threatens trouble in case parties are arrested.

"And there's more like that! Papa never intended to do anything, that's as plain as daylight. Mr. Foster, the treasurer, comes from that county. He thought papa was going to have to do something, so he's holding back the payment of the state bonds just to frighten papa. You see, the state owes the Bronx Loan and Trust Company that $250,000, and if it isn't paid June first the state will be everlastingly disgraced."

"Oh, yes; I'd forgotten about that."

"I don't see how you could forget about it. That must be almost as much money as there is in the world.

"We've got to raise it, anyhow, even if we go to the pawn-shop. I pawned my watch once when I was in college and Billings—he was my guardian—had shut me off. Grissy—he's my friend—Grissy says pawnbroking is only a more vulgar form of banking."

"I think your telegram to the sheriff is all right," said Jerry, reading it again. "If you'll go to the door and whistle for the messenger we'll get it off."

Ardmore addressed himself once more to the map. It was clear that the Appleweight gang was powerful enough to topple great states upon their foundations. It had, to Ardmore's own knowledge, driven a governor into exile, and through the wretched Foster, who was their friend, the credit of the state was gravely menaced.

"I'll wait for the sheriff's answer, and if he shows no signs of life I'll go down there this afternoon."

"Then you will undoubtedly be shot!" Jerry declared, as though announcing a prospect not wholly deplorable.

"That has its disagreeable side, but a great many people have to be shot every year to keep up the average, and if the statistics need me I won't duck. I'll call up my man on the telephone this forenoon and tell him to put my forester at Ardsley to work. He's a big fellow who served in the German army, and if he's afraid of anything I haven't heard of it. If we can drive the gang into South Carolina, right along here, you see"—and Miss Dangerfield bent her pretty head over the map and saw—"if we can pass the chief outlaw on to Gov. Osborne, then so much the better, and that's what we will try to do."

"But you're only the private secretary, and you can't assume too much authority. I shall have to go to Kildare to visit my aunt, who is a nice old lady that lives there. The fried corn mush and syrup at her house is the best I ever tasted, and if papa should come when he sees that something is being done quite different from what he intended, then I should be there to explain. If you should be killed, Mr. Ardmore, no one would be there to identify you, and I have always thought it the saddest thing in the world for any one to die away from home—"

"It would be sad; but I hope you would be sorry."

"I should regret your death, and I'd make them give you a perfectly beautiful military funeral, with Chopin's funeral march, and your boots tied to the saddle of your horse."

"But I don't let them fuss about pulling off the boots, Miss Dangerfield, if I die with them on. It would be all right for you to visit your aunt, but I shouldn't do it if I were you. I once visited my aunt, Mrs. Covington-Burns, at Newport for a week. It was a deep game to get me to marry my aunt's husband's niece, whose father had lost his money, and the girl was beginning to bore my aunt."

"Was she a pretty girl?" asked Jerry.

"She was a whole basket of peaches, and I might have married her to get away from my aunt if it were not that I have made it a life-long rule never to marry the orphaned nieces of the husbands of my aunts. It's been a good rule to me, and has saved me no end of trouble. But if my sister doesn't change her mind, and if she really comes through Raleigh today in her car with those friends of hers, she will be delighted to have you join her for a visit at Ardsley. And then you would be near at hand in case some special edict from the governor seemed necessary."

"But wouldn't your sister think it strange—"

"Not in the least, Miss Dangerfield. Nothing is strange to my sister. And besides, you are the daughter of the governor of a great state. She refuses to meet senators, because you can never be sure they are respectable, but she rather prides herself on knowing governors. Governors are very different. Since I read the constitution I can see very plainly that governors are much nearer the people, but I guess the senators are nearer the banks."

"Well, I have some shopping to do, and it's ten o'clock. It would be hospitable to ask you to luncheon, but mamma cries so much because she doesn't know where papa is that our meals at the executive mansion are not exactly cheerful functions. And besides"—and she eyed Ardmore severely as she rose and accepted her parasol from him—"and besides, you know our relations are purely official. You have never been introduced to me, and socially you are not known to us."

CHAPTER IX.

The Land of the Little Brown Jug.

Caboose 0186, with three box cars and a locomotive attached, lay in the southeastern yards at Raleigh late in the evening of the same day. In the observatory sat Mr. Thomas Ardmore, chatting with the conductor, while they waited for the right of way. Mr. Ardmore's pockets were filled with papers, and he held half a dozen telegrams in his hand. The freight cars behind him were locked and sealed, and a number of men lounging near appeared to be watching them.

The reply of the sheriff of Dilwell county had precipitated the crisis. That official succinctly replied to Ardmore's message:

Be good and acquire grace.

While this dictum had aroused Miss Dangerfield's wrath and indignation, it calmed her fellow conspirator, and for hours Ardmore had poured forth by telegraph and telephone. No such messages as his had ever before rediated from Raleigh. The tolls would have bankrupted the commonwealth if Ardmore had not cared for them out of his private purse. His forester, with an armed posse from Ardsley, was already following the streams and beating the brush in search of Appleweight. One car of Ardmore's special train contained a machine gun and a supply of rifles; another abundant ammunition and commissary supplies, and the third cots and bags. The men who loafed about the train were a detail of strike-breakers from a detective agency, borrowed for the occasion. Cooke, the conductor of the train, had formerly been in the government secret service, and knew the Carolina hill country as he knew the palm of his hand. Ardmore had warned his manager and the housekeeper on his estate to prepare for the arrival of Mrs. Atchison, whose private car had come and gone, carrying Miss Geraldine Dangerfield on to Ardsley. Ardmore had just received a message from his sister at some way station, reporting all well and containing these sentences: "She is rather different, and I do not quite make her out. She has our noble brother-in-law a good deal bewildered."

Cooke ran forward for a colloquy with the engineer over their orders; the guards climbed into one of the box cars, and the train moved slowly out of the Raleigh yards to the main line and rattled away toward Kildare, with Mr. Ardmore, pipe in mouth, perched in the caboose cupola.

Not Capt. Kidd nor another of the dark brotherhood sailed forth with keener zest for battle than Mr. Ardmore. Indeed, the trailing smoke of the locomotive suggested a black flag, and the thought of it tickled his fancy. Above bent the bluest sky in the world; fields of corn and cotton, the brilliant crimson of German clover, and long stretches of mixed forest held him with enchantment. And when night came, after the long mystical twilight, the train passed now and then great cotton factories that blazed out from their thousand windows like huge steamships.

No Exercise.

We have the impression that we get nervous troubles from to-day's rush of life. But impressions and serious thought often yield widely different results. We do rush about a lot, but man never went so little on his feet as here and now. Cars, elevators, automobiles carry where man listeth without scarcely the crook of a knee. Actually, there are men in this city who travel toward hundreds of miles a day and scarcely get enough exercise for the final cellular digestion of the rich, greasy, juicy, vinous viands they devour. And never since creation's dawn, except in aldermanic London, has the glutton's platter been so stuck under business men's noses all the time from the first thing in the morning to the last thing at night. Once in a while the Frenchman, the Dutchman and the Englishman stuff with these intensely rich, juicy gorges. But like Haffey's whisky they are here for us all all the time.—New York Press.

Nothing Slow About It.

"Well, I see that Perkins' Corners is fallin' right into line on the subject of gettin' th' very best men fer th' public offices."

"Perkins' Corners, eh? How air they doin'?"

"Fust rate, I'm told. They've got a new village constable that hails all th' way from Hooperville, and their new tillerman on th 'ol' hand engine was brought from Blueberry Junction. Why, only tother day they sent a feller over here to see Cy Lusher."

"What did he say to Cy?"

"He said that Perkins' Corners wanted the very best town drunkard it could get, and Cy went away with him."

THE SOLAR SYSTEM AND HALLEY'S COMET

BY G. I. SCHAPER.

Commencing with the 20th of this month, the comet will present its magnificent appearance in the west after sunset; setting a little later each evening and gradually growing fainter so that by the latter part of the month it will have the appearance of a hazy star, too faint to create popular interest.

The earth's moon is now traveling in such a part of its variable orbit as will bring it in line with the earth and the sun at new moon and at full moon. For this reason there was a total eclipse of the sun May 9th visible in Australia, and there will be a total eclip e of the moon May 23-24, visible in the United States.

Owing to the fact that the moon travels around the earth from west to east, the eastern edge of the moon will first enter the shadow of the earth at 9.32 p. m. May 23 and the western edge of the moon will leave the shadow of the earth at 1:08 a. m. May 24. The eclipse should become visible to the naked eye at 10 p. m. and the total eclipse at 11 p. m. May 23. The total eclipse ends a little before midnight.

The eclipse of the sun in Australia was caused by the moon taking a position between the sun and that part of the earth. The eclipse of the moon will be caused by the earth taking a position between the sun and the moon, thus shutting off the sun light from the moon. There is no planet between the earth and the moon during an eclipse of the moon.

The Best Family Newspaper

An ideal newspaper for the American home must be habitually clean and high-minded, it must offer something of interest to every member of the family, and it must present daily the news of the whole world in authentic and readable form. A large contract, you will say. Well, the newspaper that comes nearest to filling it in the West is the Chicago Record-Herald. Its moral tone is always high; its news service is unsurpassed and probably no other paper in the United States has so brilliant an array of special features suited to the tastes and needs of every member of the family.

Business and professional men have long regarded the Record-Herald as the best paper for their own reading because of its unequaled faculty for getting all the news of the world and putting it into the briefest possible form for the busy man. They also esteem it for the reliability of its financial, agricultural and market reports. Young men perhaps find its greatest attraction in the excellent sporting department, which fills four entire pages on Sunday and a page or more on other days. Wives and mothers emphatically prefer the Record-Herald on account of its well-conducted feminine departments—its daily recipes and menus, its daily fashion news and hints for home dressmaking, Mme. Qui Vive's pungent and sensible beauty talks, Marian Harland's famous page and the rest of the good things that make up the handsome Woman's Section in the Sunday paper. Children enjoy the Little Nemo and other Comic Section pictures, with the bright stories for boys and girls every Sunday. And all the family together can enjoy the interesting travels and special articles of William E. Curtis, Mr. Kiser's humor and verse, the serial stories and many similar features outside the news columns.

The Chicago Record-Herald has every right to call itself the best all-around family newspaper in the west.

Lion Fondles a Child

In Pittsburg a savage lion fondled the hand that a child thrust into his cage. Danger to a child is sometimes great when least regarded. Often it comes through colds croup and whooping cough. They slay thousands that Dr. King's New Discovery could have saved. "A few doses cured our baby of a very bad case of croup," writes Mrs. George B. Davis, of Flat Rock, N. C. "We always give it to him when he takes cold. It is a wonderful medicine for babies." Best for coughs, colds, lagrippe, asthma, hemorrhages, weak lungs, 50c, $1.00. Trial bottle free. Guaranteed by the Old Reliable Drug Store.

Bitterness of Quinine

An old negro man riding on the train, fell asleep with his mouth wide open. A mischevious drummer came along, and having a convenient capsule of quinine in his pocket, he uncorked it and sifted the bitter dose well into the old negro's palate and the root of his tongue. Soon the darkey awoke and became much disturbed. He called for the conductor and asked:

"Boss, is dere a doctor on dis here train?"

"I don't know," said the conductor, "are you sick?"

"Yes, sah, I sho is sick."

"What is the matter with you?"

"I dunno, sah, but it tastes like I busted my gall."—Cover Chat.

The fire department was unable to work effectively, owing to the distance of the residence from a hydrant. The students turned out and succeeded in saving most of the household goods, and personal belongings of the family. The loss on the residence and goods is estimated at $10,000; insurance $4,000.

LIFE-SAPPING PARASITES THAT WRECK HUMAN SYSTEM

The following remarkable statement was recently made by L. T. Cooper. It concerns the preparation which has been so widely discussed throughout the country during the past year, and has sold in such enormous quantities in leading cities:

"It is now a well-known fact that wherever I have introduced my New Discovery medicine, hundreds of people have brought internal parasites, or tapeworms, to me. In many cases these people did not know the nature of the parasite, and were consequently extremely nervous until I explained the matter to them. In some cities so many have had this experience that the public generally became alarmed.

"I take this opportunity of explaining what these creatures are, and what I have learned about them in the past.

"Tapeworms are much more common than would be supposed. I venture to say that ten per cent. of all chronic stomach trouble, or what is known as a 'rundown' condition, is caused by them. An individual may suffer for years with one of these great parasites and not be aware of it.

"Contrary to general belief, the appetite is not greatly increased—it only becomes irregular. There is a general feeling of faintness, however, and a gnawing sensation in the pit of the stomach.

"People afflicted with one of these parasites are nervous and depressed. Their chief sensation is one of languor, and they tire very easily. Lack of energy and ambition affect the body, and the mind becomes dull and sluggish. The memory becomes not so good, and the eyesight is generally poorer.

"The New Discovery, in freeing stomach and bowels of all impurities, seems to be fatal to these great worms, and almost immediately expels them from the system. I wish to assure anyone who has the experience just related with my preparation, that there is no cause for alarm in the matter, and that it will as a rule mean a speedy restoration to good health."

Cooper's New Discovery is sold by all druggists. If your druggist cannot supply you, we will forward you the name of a druggist in your city who will. Don't accept "something just as good."—The Cooper Medicine Co., Dayton, Ohio.

Noisy Nuisances.

Ill-fitting doors and windows represent a happy hunting ground for the disturbing winds. In fact, so annoying does the constant rattle of these openings become that many determined individuals, who resolve to admit the fresh air, choose the lesser of two evils and close the openings in preference to sleepless nights. This can be remedied if a small wedge of wood be driven at the side of an open window; a door can be prevented from rattling if a pad or strip of thick felt be nailed on the edge of the door.

The annoyance of creaking drawers can be eliminated by rubbing common soap upon the top, sides and bottom of each.

Creaking hinges on anything should be well oiled, while the grating, irritating noise of a sewing machine can be overcome in a similar manner.

The little noises wear away the patience that is required for other things. It were foolish to dissipate energy through the channels of irritated nerves when a little time will obviate the nuisances.

The LITTLE BROWN JUG at KILDARE

SYNOPSIS.

Thomas Ardmore, bored millionaire, and Henry Maine Griswold, professor in the University of Virginia, take trains out of Atlanta. Griswold to his college, Ardmore in pursuit of a girl who had winked at him. Mistaken for Gov. Osborne of South Carolina, Griswold's life is threatened. He goes to Columbia to warn the governor and meets Barbara Osborne. Ardmore learns that his winking lady is the daughter of Gov. Dangerfield of North Carolina. He follows her to Raleigh, and on the way is given a brown jug at Kildare. In Raleigh he discovers that the jug bears a message threatening Dangerfield unless Appleweight, a criminal, is allowed to go free. Ardmore becomes allied with Jerry Dangerfield in running the affairs of the state in the absence of the governor. A scathing telegram is sent to Gov. Osborne. Griswold becomes adviser to Barbara Osborne, who is attending to her father's duties in South Carolina. Orders are sent to the sheriff to capture Appleweight. Valuable papers are missing from Gov. Osborne's office.

"But you forget that you represent Mr. Osborne. On the other hand I represent Gov. Osborne, and if I want the Appleweight papers I had every right to them."

"After office hours, feloniously and with criminal intent?" laughed Griswold.

"We will assume that I have them," sneered Bosworth, "and such being the case I will return them only to the governor."

"Then"—and Griswold's smile broadened—"if it comes to concessions, I will grant that you are within your rights in wishing to place them in the governor's own hands. The governor of South Carolina is now, so to speak, in camera."

"The governor is hiding. He's afraid to come to Columbia, and the whole state knows it."

"The papers, my friend; and I will satisfy you that the governor of South Carolina is under this roof and transacting business."

"Here in the statehouse?" demanded Bosworth, and he blanched and twisted the buttons of his coat nervously.

"The governor of South Carolina, the supreme power of the state, charged with full responsibility, enjoying all the immunities, rights and privileges unto him belonging."

It was clear that Bosworth took no stock whatever in Griswold's story, but Griswold's pretended employment by the governor and his apparent knowledge of the governor's affairs, piqued his curiosity. He stepped to an inner office, came back with a packet of papers and thrust a revolver into his pocket with so vain a show of it that Griswold laughed aloud.

"What! Do you still back your arguments with firearms down here? It's a method that has gone out of fashion in Virginia!"

"If there's a trick in this it will be the worse for you," scowled Bosworth.

"And pray, remember on your side, that you are to give these documents into the hands of the governor. Come along."

They met the watchman in the corridor and he saluted them and passed on. Bosworth strode eagerly forward in his anxiety to prick the bubble of Griswold's pretensions.

Griswold threw open the door of the governor's reception-room, and they blinked in the stronger light that poured in from the private office. There, in the governor's chair by the broad official desk, sat Barbara Osborne reading a newspaper.

"Your excellency," said Griswold, bowing gravely and advancing; "I beg to present the attorney-general!"

"Barbara!"

The papers fell from the attorney general's hands. He stood staring until astonishment began to yield to rage as he realized that a trap had been sprung upon him. The girl had risen instantly and a smile played about her lips for a moment. She had vaguely surmised that Griswold would charge Bosworth with the loss of the papers, but her associate in the conspiracy had now given a turn to the matter that amused her.

"Barbara!" blurted the attorney general, "what game is this—what contemptible trick is this stranger playing on you? Don't you understand that your father's absence is a most serious matter and that in the present condition of this Appleweight affair it is likely to involve him and the state in scandal?"

Barbara regarded him steadily for a moment with a negative sort of gaze. She took a step forward before she spoke and then she asked quickly and sharply:

"What have you done, Mr. Bosworth, to avert these calamities, and what was in your mind when you pried open the drawer and took out those papers?"

"I was going to use the requisition—"

"How?"

"Why, I expected—"

"Mr. Bosworth expected to effect a coup for his own glory during the governor's absence," suggested Griswold.

"How?" and Barbara's voice rang imperiously and her eyes flashed.

"Send this unknown person, this impostor and meddler, away and I will talk to you as old friends may talk together," and he glared fiercely at Griswold, who stood fanning himself with his hat.

"I asked you how you intended to serve my father, Mr. Bosworth, because you sent me this afternoon a letter in which you threatened me—you threatened me with my father's ruin if I did not marry you. You would take advantage of my trouble and anxiety to force that question on me when I had answered it once and for all long ago. Before this stranger I want to tell you that you are a despicable coward and that if you think you can humiliate me or my father or the state by such practices as you have resorted to you are very greatly mistaken. And further, Mr. Bosworth, if I find you interfering again in this matter I shall print that letter you wrote me to-day in every paper in the state! Now, that is all I have to say to you, and I hope never to see you again."

"Before you go, Mr. Bosworth," said Griswold, "I wish to say that Miss Osborne has spoken of your conduct with altogether too much restraint. I shall add, on my own account, that if I find you meddling again in this Appleweight case, I shall first procure your removal from office and after that I shall take the greatest pleasure in flogging you within an inch of your life. Now go!"

CHAPTER VIII.

The Labors of Mr. Ardmore.

While he waited for Miss Jerry Dangerfield to appear Mr. Thomas Ardmore read for the first time the constitution of the United States. He had reached the governor's office early, and, seeking diversion, he had picked up a small volume that bore some outward resemblance to a novel. This proved, however, to be Johnston's "American Politics," and he was amazed to find that this diminutive work contained the answers to a great many questions which had often perplexed him, but which he had imagined could not be answered except by statesmen or by men like his friend Griswold, who spent their lives in study.

He made note of several matters he wished to ask Griswold about when they met again; then turned back into the body of the text and had read as far as Burr's conspiracy when Jerry came breezily in. He experienced for the first time in his life that obsession of guilt which sinks in shame the office boy who is caught reading a dime novel. Jerry seemed to tower above him like an avenging angel, and though her sword was only a parasol, her words cut deep enough.

"Well, you are taking it pretty cool!"

"Taking what?" faltered Ardmore, standing up, and seeking to hide the book behind his back.

"Why, this outrageous article!" and she thrust a newspaper under his eyes. "Do you mean to say you haven't seen the morning paper?"

"To tell you the truth, Miss Dangerfield, I hardly ever read the papers."

"What's that you were reading when I came in?" she demanded severely, withholding the paper until she should be answered.

"It's a book about the government, and the powers reserved to the states and that sort of thing. I was just reading the constitution; I thought it might help us—I mean you—in your work."

"The constitution help me? Hasn't it occurred to you before this that what I'm doing is all against the constitution and the revised statutes and all those books you see on the shelf there?"

"But the constitution sounds all right. It seems remarkably reasonable. You couldn't ask anything fairer than that!"

"So are the ten commandments fair enough; but you're on the wrong track, Mr. Ardmore, if you're trying to support the present administration with stupid things in books. I don't follow precedents, Mr. Ardmore; I create them."

She turned to the morning mail while he read, and opened the envelopes rapidly. Such of the letters as she thought interesting or important she put aside, and when Ardmore finished reading a double-leaded telegram from Columbia, in which the governor of South Carolina was quoted as declaring his intention of taking immediate steps for the apprehension of Appleweight, she was still reading and sorting letters, tapping her cheek lightly meanwhile with the official paper-knife.

"Here, Mr. Ardmore," she said, drawing a paper from her pocket, "is the answer to that telegram we sent yesterday evening. Suppose you read that next, and we can then decide what to do."

She was making the letters into little piles, humming softly meanwhile; but he felt that there was a storm brewing. He read the message from Columbia a number of times, and if the acting governor had not been so ominously quiet he would have laughed at the terse sentences.

"There must be a mistake about this. He wouldn't have used 'diverting' that way; that's insulting!"

"So you appreciate its significance, do you, Mr. Ardmore? The iron enters your soul, does it? You realize that I have been insulted, do you?"

"I shouldn't put it that way, Miss Dangerfield. Gov. Osborne would never have sent a message like that to you—he thought he was sending it to your father."

"He's insulted me and every other citizen in the Old North State; that's who he's insulted, Mr. Ardmore. Let me read it again;" and she repeated the telegram aloud:

"'Your extremely diverting telegram in Appleweight case received and filed.' I think it's the extremely that's so perfectly mean. The diverting by itself would not hurt my feelings half so much. He's a good deal smarter man than I thought he was to think up a telegram like that. But what do you think of that piece in the newspaper?"

"He says he's going to catch Appleweight dead or alive. That sounds pretty serious."

"I think it's a bluff, myself. That telegram we sent him yesterday must have scared him to death. He was driven into a corner and had to do something to avoid being disgraced, and it's easy enough to talk big in the newspapers when you haven't the slightest intention of doing anything at all. I've noticed that father talks the longest and loudest about things he doesn't believe at all."

"Is it possible?" whispered Ardmore incredulously.

"Of course it's possible! Father would never have been elected if he'd expressed his real sentiments; neither would anybody else ever be elected if he said beforehand what he really believed."

"That must have been the reason I got defeated for alderman on the reform ticket. I told 'em I was for turning the rascals out."

"That was very stupid of you. You've got to get the rascals to elect you first; then if you're tired of office and don't need them any more you bounce them. But that's political practice; it's a theory we've got to work out now. The newspapers are a lot of bother. I spent all yesterday evening talking to reporters. They came to the house to ask where papa was and when he would be home!"

"What did you tell them?"

"I didn't tell them anything. I sent out for two other girls and we all just talked to them and kept talking, and gave them lemon sherbet and ginger cookies; and Eve Hungerford played the banjo. But what were you doing, Mr. Ardmore, that you didn't come around to help? It seems to me you don't appreciate the responsibilities of being secretary to a governor."

"I was afraid you might scold me if I did. And besides I was glued to the long distance telephone all evening, talking to my manager at Ardsley. He read me my letters and a lot of telegrams that annoyed me very much. I wish you wouldn't be so hard on me, for I have trifling troubles of my own."

"I didn't suppose you ever had troubles; you certainly don't act as though you ever had."

"No one who has never been brother-in-law to a duke has the slightest idea of what trouble is."

"I've seen the duke of Ballywinkle's picture in the papers and he looks very attractive."

"Well, if you'd ever seen him eat celery you'd change your mind. He's going down to Ardsley to visit me; for sheer nerve I must say my relations beat the world. I got my place over here in North Carolina just to get away from them, and now my sister—not the duchess, but Mrs. Atchison—is coming down there with a lot of girls and Ballywinkle has attached himself to the party. They'll pass through here to-day, and they'll expect to find me at Ardsley."

Various Jewish Projects.

As long ago as 1666 Sabati Zevi set the Jews of Europe preparing for a return to Palestine. Not only the poorer brethren but even the rich merchants of Venice and Leghorn were seized by the excitement, and for a whole century, the great bulk of the people refused to be disillusioned. It was not until the appearance of George Eliot's "Daniel Deronda" that the Jewish nationalist movement received another stimulus so strong as this; but in the meantime many schemes were propounded, including an attempt in 1854 to float a company "to enable the descendants of Israel to obtain and cultivate the land of promise." Various famous people have been interested in the idea of establishing an independent Jewish kingdom, not necessarily in Palestine. The Dutch West India Company tried the experiment in Curacoa, and Oliver Cromwell did the same in Surinam. Marshal Saxe proposed such a kingdom in South America with himself as king, and, in 1860, Judge Noah purchased Grand island in the River Niagara with a view to founding a Jewish state.

Humor and Morality.

We have extirpated gross humor from our modern literature; but we must not suppose that we are therefore more moral than the Elizabethans, whose literature was full of gross humor. It may be that we are only more afraid of ourselves and each other. This kind of fear is destructive not only of gross humor, but of humor of all kinds. In its essence humor is brave as it is honest; but with cowardice and dishonesty there come base substitutes for it, substitutes that make fun of noble things with a humorous air and so bring humor itself into discredit.

That the steel car is of great value as a protection to passengers in the event of collision was demonstrated in a recent clash of two trains in the Hudson tunnel, New York city. There was no such telescoping as would probably have occurred with wooden cars, and the injuries were merely such as resulted from the passengers being thrown down by the shock of the collision.

An Explanation

We give space this week to an article entitled "An Open Letter to the Readers of the Klemme Times," and signed by Reemt Kirchhefer, pastor of the Ellstown and Garner German Reformed Church. This article is called forth by one which appeared in our German M. E. Church News in our issue of May 5th.

In view of the statements made in the "Open Letter," the publisher of this paper deems it necessary to make a few remarks in his own behalf and in so doing we want it distinctly understood that we are taking up no man's fight but our own.

In the first place we are not in sympathy with newspaper personalities and do not intend to make a practice of admitting them to our columns, but we willingly give the writer of the "Open Letter" space this week as we do not wish anyone to think we are unfair or partial.

The explanation we wish to make here is this: We positively do not, never have and never will allow anonymous articles to be published in our paper and when we printed the article referred to in our issue of May 5th we did so with the belief that every reader of the Times knows and has known that the German M. E. Church news column is written and has been written for years by Rev. Wessel, of the Klemme German M. E. Church. We make this explanation in order to make it clear that we were honest in believing that everyone of our readers knew the authorship of the offending article of May 5th.

Open Letter to the Readers of "The Klemme Times"

The undersigned, whose name appears under this missal as a matter of honesty and honor and not from a crave for popularity, was led to take notice of an article in the "Times." Mr. A. E. Katter, a subscriber to the paper, at my request gave me his copy, which is before me on my desk. The article to which I allude is in the issue of May 5 a.c. and to be found on page 8. To this I wish briefly to reply and I confine myself to only a few remarks for today and submit the following to a calm and unprejudiced consideration of the readers: A Lutheran minister and another one "of the same calibre, though of a different denomination, who lives less than a hundred miles away" were the subjects of severe censure in the mentioned article. This article bears the stamp of professional bushwhackery, a manner of warfare which laid low many of our best soldiers in the civil war. It was the practice of these bushwhackers to shoot their victims in the back from ambush. The lot of a bushwhacker was, when catched, to be hanged by the neck with a rope until dead. I do honor an open enemy, but I cannot engage in a close and honorable fight, if my enemy will remain concealed—if he will not mention his own name and the names of those ministers he censured in his article. The bushwhackery of the writer of the article consisted in withholding his own name and those of the two preachers from the public. His gun was charged with his "christian spirit" and its range and mark somewhere in the area of a circle, whose diameter is equal to 199 miles and a fraction, of which Klemme is the center. This is all I have to say to the readers for this time.

To the writer of the article I do now make the following challenge: Sir, come out from ambush into the open field; give me your name and those of the calumniated preachers. If you don't, I declare you to be: A religious bushwhacker and a hypocritically spirited coward! Until you do this, I am without the least bit of respect for you and your kind.

The Iowa republican campaigners this year are alive to the value of advertising. Both wings of the party are offering the Iowa newspapers all kinds of free plate matter setting forth the excellent qualities of their respective candidates, and a large number of newspapers in this vicinity are taking the bait all right. BABY WASTED TO SKELETON

"My little son, when about a year and a half old, began to have sores come out on his face. I had a physician treat him, but the sores grew worse. Then they began to come out on his arms, then on other parts of his body, and then one came on his chest, worse than the others. Then I called another physician. Still he grew worse. At the end of about a year and a half of suffering he grew so bad that I had to tie his hands in cloths at night to keep him from scratching the sores and tearing the flesh. He got to be a mere skeleton, and was hardly able to walk.

"My aunt advised me to try Cuticura Soap and Cuticura Ointment. I sent to a drug store and got a cake of Cuticura Soap and a box of the Ointment and followed directions. At the end of two months the sores were all well. He has never had any sores of any kind since. I can sincerely say that only for Cuticura my child would have died. I used only one cake of Cuticura Soap and about three boxes of Ointment.

"I am a nurse and my profession brings me into many different families and it is always a pleasure for me to tell my story and recommend Cuticura Remedies. Mrs. Egbert Sheldon, Litchfield, Conn., Oct. 23, 1909."

A BOY'S HOLIDAYS.

The ardent controversy which has been waging in England and America concerning the best way to dispose of school boys in the long summer vacation has prompted the Grand Trunk Railway System to issue a special publication giving suggestions and practical hints to parents, as to what to do with the school boy during the months of July and August. The vacation camp is one of the solutions and the publication entitled, "What shall a Boy do with his Vacation?" thoroughly covers the ground.

MODERN CIVILIZATION IS ROOSEVELT'S TOPIC

Interesting Lecture on "The World Movement" Delivered at the University of Berlin by the Ex-President of the United States

Berlin. — Ex-President Theodore Roosevelt appeared Thursday before an audience that tested the capacity of the aula at the University of Berlin, and delivered a lecture on "The World Movement." He spoke in English and was listened to with the deepest interest.

Beginning with an eloquent eulogy of the German race and its achievements, the lecturer soon reached the main theme of his discourse, and reviewed the civilization and culture, so far as we know them, of the earliest peoples and their contributions to the modern world. He then continued:

At last, a little over 400 years ago, the movement towards a world civilization took up its interrupted march. The beginning of the modern movement may roughly be taken as synchronizing with the discovery of printing, and with that series of bold sea ventures which culminated in the discovery of America; and after these two epochal feats had begun to produce their full effects in material and intellectual life, it became inevitable that civilization should thereafter differ not only in degree but even in kind from all that had gone before. Immediately after the voyage of Columbus and Vasco da Gama there began a tremendous religious ferment; the awakening of intellect went hand in hand with the moral uprising; the great names of Copernicus, Bruno, Kepler, and Galileo show that the mind of man was breaking the fetters that had cramped it; and for the first time experimentation was used as a check upon observation and theorization. Since then, century by century, the changes have increased in rapidity and complexity, and have attained their maximum in both respects during the century just past.

Instead of being directed by one or two dominant peoples, as was the case with all similar movements of the past, the new movement was shared by many different nations. From every standpoint it has been of infinitely greater moment than anything hitherto seen. Not in one but in many different peoples there has been extraordinary growth in wealth, in population, in power of organization, and in mastery over mechanical activity and natural resources. All of this has been accompanied and signalized by an immense outburst of energy and restless initiative. The result is varied as it is striking.

Conquest of the World.

In the first place, representatives of this civilization, by their conquest of space, were enabled to spread into all the practically vacant continents, while at the same time, by their triumphs in organization and mechanical invention, they acquired an unheard-of military superiority as compared with their former rivals. To these two facts is primarily due the further fact that for the first time there is really something that approaches a world civilization, a world movement. The spread of the European peoples since the days of Ferdinand the Catholic and Ivan the Terrible has been across every sea and over every continent. In places the conquests have been ethnic; that is, there has been a new wandering of the peoples, and new commonwealths have sprung up in which the people are entirely or mainly of European blood. This is what happened in the temperate and sub-tropical regions of the Western Hemisphere, in Australia, in portions of northern Asia and southern Africa. In other places the conquest has been purely political, the Europeans representing for the most part merely a small caste of soldiers and administrators, as in most of tropical Asia and Africa and in much of tropical America. Finally, here and there instances occur where there has been no conquest at all, but where an alien people is profoundly and radically changed by the mere impact of western civilization.

There are of course many grades between these different types of influence, but the net outcome of what has occurred during the last four centuries is that civilization of the European type now exercises a more or less profound effect over practically the entire world. There are nooks and corners to which it has not yet penetrated; but there is at present no large space of territory in which the general movement of civilized activity does not make itself more or less felt. This represents something wholly different from what has ever hitherto been seen. In the greatest days of Roman dominion the influence of Rome was felt over only a relatively small portion of the world's surface. Over much the larger part of the world the process of change and development was absolutely unaffected by anything that occurred in the Roman empire; and those communities the play of whose influence was felt in action and reaction, and in inter-action, among themselves, were grouped immediately around the Mediterranean. Now, however, the whole world is bound together as never before; the bonds are sometimes those of hatred rather than love, but they are bonds nevertheless.

All the Nations Linked.

Frowning or hopeful, every man of leadership in any line of thought or effort must now look beyond the limits of his own country. The student of sociology may live in Berlin or St. Petersburg, Rome or London, or he may live in Melbourne or San Francisco or Buenos Aires; but in whatever city he lives, he must pay heed to the studies of men who live in each of the other cities. When in America we study labor problems and attempt to deal with subjects such as life insurance for wage-workers, we turn to see what you do here in Germany, and we also turn to see what the far-off commonwealth of New Zealand is doing. When a great German scientist is warring against the most dreaded enemies of mankind, creatures of infinitesimal size which the microscope reveals in his blood, he may spend his holidays of study in central Africa or in eastern Asia; and he must know what is accomplished in the laboratories of Tokyo, just as he must know the details of that practical application of science which has changed the Isthmus of Panama from a death-trap into what is almost a health resort. Every progressive in China is striving to introduce western methods of education and administration, and hundreds of European and American books are now translated into Chinese. The influence of European governmental principles is strikingly illustrated by the fact that admiration for them has broken down the iron barriers of Moslem conservatism, so that their introduction has become a burning question in Turkey and Persia; while the very unrest, the impatience of European or American control, in India, Egypt, or the Philippines, takes the form of demanding that the government be assimilated more closely to what it is in England or the United States.

So much for the geographical side of the expansion of modern civilization. But only a few of the many and intense activities of modern civilization have found their expression on this side. The movement has been just as striking in its conquest over natural forces, in its searching inquiry into and about the soul of things.

Steam and electricity have given the race dominion over land and water such as it never had before; and now the conquest of the air is directly impending. As books preserve thought through time, so the telegraph and the telephone transmit it through the space they annihilate, and therefore minds are swayed one by another without regard to the limitations of space and time which formerly forced each community to work in comparative isolation. It is the same with the body as with the brain. The machinery of the factory and the farm enormously multiplies bodily skill and vigor. Countless trained intelligences are at work to teach us how to avoid or counteract the effects of waste.

The advances in the realm of pure intellect have been of equal note, and they have been both intensive and extensive. Great virgin fields of learning and wisdom have been discovered by the few, and at the same time knowledge has spread among the many to a degree never dreamed of before. Old men among us have seen in their own generation the rise of the first rational science of the evolution of life. The astronomer and the chemist, the psychologist and the historian, and all their brethren in many different fields of wide endeavor, work with a training and knowledge and method which are in effect instruments of precision differentiating their labors from the labors of their predecessors as the rifle is differentiated from the bow.

The play of new forces is as evident in the moral and spiritual world as in the world of the mind and the body.

One Danger of Civilization.

One of the prime dangers of civilization has always been its tendency to cause the loss of the virile fighting virtues, of the fighting edge. When men get too comfortable and lead too luxurious lives there is always danger lest the softness eat like an acid into their manliness of fiber. The barbarian, because of the very conditions of his life, is forced to keep and develop certain hardy qualities which the man of civilization tends to lose, whether he be clerk, factory hand, merchant, or even a certain type of farmer. Now I will not assert that in modern civilized society these tendencies have been wholly overcome; but there has been a much more successful effort to overcome them than was the case in the early civilizations. This is curiously shown by the military history of the Graeco-Roman period as compared with the history of the last four or five centuries here in Europe and among nations of European descent. In the Grecian and Roman military history the change was steadily from a citizen army to an army of mercenaries. In the days of the early greatness of Athens, Thebes, and Sparta, in the days when the Roman republic conquered what world it knew, the armies were filled with citizen soldiers. But gradually the citizens refused to serve in the armies, or became unable to render good service. The Greek states described by Polybius, with but few exceptions, hired others to do their fighting for them. The Romans of the days of Augustus had utterly ceased to furnish any cavalry, and were rapidly ceasing to furnish any infantry, to the legions and cohorts. When the civilization came to an end, there were no longer citizens in the ranks of the soldiers. The change from the citizen army to the army of mercenaries had been completed.

Modern Citizens' Armies.

Now, the exact reverse has been the case with us in modern times. A few centuries ago the mercenary soldier was the principal figure in most armies, and in great numbers of cases the mercenary soldier was an alien. In the wars of religion in France, in the Thirty Years' war in Germany, in the wars that immediately marked the beginning of the break-up of the great Polish kingdom, the regiments and brigades of foreign soldiers formed a striking and leading feature in every army. Too often the men of the country in which the fighting took place played merely the ignoble part of victims, the burghers and peasants appearing in but limited numbers in the mercenary armies by which they were plundered. Gradually this has all changed, until now practically every army is a citizen army, and the mercenary has almost disappeared, while the army exists on a vaster scale than ever before in history. This is so among the military monarchies of Europe.

In our own Civil war of the United States the same thing occurred, peaceful people as we are. At that time more than two generations had passed since the War of Independence. During the whole of that period the people had been engaged in no life-and-death struggle; and yet, when the Civil war broke out, and after some costly and bitter lessons at the beginning, the fighting spirit of the people was shown to better advantage than ever before. The war was peculiar-

Mrs. Catherine Sullivan, 1712 Moffatt St., Joplin, Mo., says: "Like most elderly people, I suffered from kidney trouble for years. My back ached intensely and there was a feeling of numbness in my spine. My hands cramped and the urinary passages were profuse. Doctors prescribed for me but I was not benefited. At last I began taking Doan's Kidney Pills. They drove my troubles away, and I now enjoy excellent health."

ly a war for a principle, a war waged by each side for an ideal, and while faults and shortcomings were plentiful among the combatants, there was comparatively little sordidness of motive or conduct. In such a giant struggle, where across the warp of so many interests is shot the woof of so many purposes, dark strands and bright, strands somber and brilliant, are always intertwined; inevitably there was corruption here and there in the Civil war; but all the leaders on both sides, and the great majority of the enormous masses of fighting men, wholly disregarded, and were wholly uninfluenced by, pecuniary considerations.

Wealth and Politics.

Another striking contrast in the course of modern civilization as compared with the later stages of the Graeco-Roman or classic civilization is to be found in the relations of wealth and politics. In classic times, as the civilization advanced toward its zenith, politics became a recognized means of accumulating great wealth. Caesar was again and again on the verge of bankruptcy; he spent an enormous fortune; and he recouped himself by the money which he made out of his political-military career. Augustus established imperial Rome on firm foundations by the use he made of the huge fortune he had acquired by plunder. What a contrast is offered by the careers of Washington and Lincoln! There were a few exceptions in ancient days; but the immense majority of the Greeks and the Romans, as their civilizations culminated, accepted money-making on a large scale as one of the incidents of a successful public career. Now all of this is in sharp contrast to what has happened within the last two or three centuries. During this time there has been a steady growth away from the theory that money-making is permissible in an honorable public career.

In this respect the standard has been constantly elevated, and things which statesmen had no hesitation in doing three centuries or two centuries ago, and which did not seriously hurt a public career even a century ago, are now utterly impossible. Wealthy men still exercise a large, and sometimes an improper, influence in politics, but it is apt to be an indirect influence; and in the advanced states the mere suspicion that the wealth of public men is obtained or added to as an incident of their public careers will bar them from public life. Speaking generally, wealth may very greatly influence modern political life, but it is not acquired in political life.

Optimistic for the Future.

Mr. Roosevelt called attention to the fact that hitherto every civilization that has arisen has been able to develop only a few activities, its field of endeavor being limited in kind as well as in locality, and each of these civilizations has fallen. What is the lesson to us of today? he asked. Will the crash come, and be all the more terrible because of the immense increase in activities and area? To this he replied:

Personally, I do not believe that our civilization will fall. I think that on the whole we have grown better and not worse. I think that on the whole the future holds more for us than even the great past has held. But, assuredly, the dreams of golden glory in the future will not come true unless, high of heart and strong of hand, by our own mighty deeds we make them come true. We cannot afford to develop any one set of qualities, any one set of activities, at the cost of seeing others, equally necessary, atrophied. Neither the military efficiency of the Mongol, the extraordinary business ability of the Phoenician, nor the subtle and polished intellect of the Greek availed to avert destruction.

We, the men of today and of the future, need many qualities if we are to do our work well. We need, first of all and most important of all, the qualities which stand at the base of individual, of family life, the fundamental and essential qualities—the homely, every-day, all-important virtues. If the average man will not work, if he has not in him the will and the power to be a good husband and father; if the average woman is not a good housewife, a good mother of many healthy children, then the state will topple, will go down, no matter what may be its brilliance of artistic development or material achievement. But these homely qualities are not enough. There must, in addition, be that power of organization, that power of working in common for a common end, which the German people have shown in such signal fashion during the last half-century. Moreover, the things of the spirit are even more important than the things of the body. We can well do without the hard intolerance and arid intellectual barrenness of what was worst in the theological systems of the past, but there has never been a greater need of a high and fine religious spirit than at the present time. So, while we can laugh good-humoredly at some of the pretensions of modern philosophy in its various branches, it would be worse than folly on our part to ignore our need of intellectual leadership.

Must Steer Middle Course.

Never has philanthropy, humanitarianism, seen such development as now; and though we must all beware of the folly and the viciousness no worse than folly, which marks the believer in the perfectibility of man when his heart runs away with his head, or when vanity usurps the place of conscience, yet we must remember also that it is only by working along the lines laid down by the philanthropists, by the lovers of mankind, that we can be sure of lifting our civilization to a higher and more permanent plane of well-being than was ever attained by any preceding civilization. Unjust war is to be abhorred; but woe to the nation that does not make ready to hold its own in time of need against all who would harm it; and woe thrice over to the nation in which the average man loses the fighting edge, loses the power to serve as a soldier if the day of need should arise.

It is no impossible dream to build up a civilization in which morality, ethical development, and a true feeling of brotherhood shall alike be divorced from false sentimentality, and from the rancorous and evil passions which, curiously enough, so often accompany professions of sentimental attachment to the rights of man; in which a high material development in the things of the body shall be achieved without subordination of the things of the soul; in which there shall be a genuine desire for peace and justice without loss of those virile qualities without which no love of peace or justice shall avail any race; in which the fullest development of scientific research, the great distinguishing feature of our present civilization shall yet not imply a belief that intellect can ever take the place of character—for from the standpoint of the nation as of the individual, it is character that is the one vital possession.

ANOTHER WOMAN CURED

By Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound

Black Duck, Minn.—"About a year ago I wrote you that I was sick and could not do any of my housework. My sickness was called Retroflexion. When I would sit down I felt as if I could not get up. I took Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and did just as you told me and now I am perfectly cured, and have a big baby boy."—Mrs. Anna Anderson, Box 19, Black Duck, Minn.

Consider This Advice.

No woman should submit to a surgical operation, which may mean death, until she has given Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, made exclusively from roots and herbs, a fair trial.

This famous medicine for women has for thirty years proved to be the most valuable tonic and invigorator of the female organism. Women residing in almost every city and town in the United States bear willing testimony to the wonderful virtue of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound. It cures female ills, and creates radiant, buoyant female health. If you are ill, for your own sake as well as those you love, give it a trial.

Mrs. Pinkham, at Lynn, Mass., invites all sick women to write her for advice. Her advice is free, and always helpful.

Britt Tribune: Charley Stiehl of Klemme, is a candidate for recorder on the democratic ticket this year. We lived a neighbor to Charley and his excellent old father for many years and know that no better neighbors ever inhabited this planet, but for some reason we never knew that Charley was a democrat, or if we did we had forgotten it If he should be elected and makes as good an officer as he did a neighbor, it will be good enough. If Charley was a democrat, it was one of the good kind.

He is a man of clean habits, a successful business man, a man of the highest integrity and honesty, a man with the ability to perform the duties of the treasurer's office to which he aspires in an acceptable and highly efficient manner, and should he be nominated and elected we feel confident he will make good and be a credit to himself and the people who elected him. He does not pose as the candidate of any particular locality but as the people's candidate and the voters will make no mistake by supporting him June 7th.

X J. R. BAGGS

Republican Candidate for County Superintendent
June Primaries

Instructor in Six Hancock County Institutes

GARNER, IOWA

Prof. Baggs, candidate for County Superintendent, received the following write-up in the Cerro Gordo County Republican when he began work in Garner:

We have known Prof. Baggs since he was a boy, and are proud of the advancement he has made. He is an example of a lad with brains and ambition who determined to rise in the world. After finishing in the schools at Dennison he decided to attend the Baptist College at Des Moines. He worked for his board, and delivered the morning Des Moines Register, rising each day at 3:30 a. m., running down to the printing office, getting his bundle of paper and delivering them and back to his boarding place by six. When the call came for college boys to serve as guides to visitors and pusher of the big wheel chairs he was on hand and the information he gained in the three months of his life at the Chicago exposition was of much value to him and the boys and girls and teachers whom he has since been called upon to instruct. He was later a professor in the Baptist college at Sac City, Iowa and the Normal school at Denison. He went out to Salt Lake City on business just before the war with Spain and on the call for volunteers joined a battery, and was a part of the first troops of the U. S. government to land at Manila, and was in the Philippine Islands over a year. On taking up school work he became principal of the schools at Dow City, then went to Corwith and now advances to the schools of Garner. The people of Garner have in him a man of high character, anxious for advancement in good government and education.

HER TALL REBEL.

By MARIA D. FUREY.

[Copyright, 1910, by American Press Association.]

On Holborn street in London is a row of buildings that any sightseer passing on top of a motor bus would recognize at once as having been left among modern buildings from a past age. It is called the Staple inn, and here Dr. Johnson wrote his "Idler."

One morning after the battle of Culloden, which ended the rebellion in Scotland led by the pretender, three Scotchmen who had been captured in arms against the king were being conducted past the Staple inn to the Tower. A block stopped the sad cortege. One of the prisoners, MacDougal, was a very tall man, overlooking his fellows, and withal singularly handsome. A lady looking from the window of the inn called out to him:

"You tall rebel, you will soon be shorter by a head."

MacDougal turned a pair of large, sad eyes upon her and asked deferentially:

"Does that give you pleasure, madam?"

"It does."

"Then, madam"—taking off his hat and making a low bow—"I do not die in vain."

The way having been cleared, the procession passed on, and the lady withdrew from the window.

MacDougal, soon after arriving at the Tower, was about to be led out to execution when the lieutenant received an order for a stay. Several days passed, the prisoner expecting death all the while, when the door of his cell was opened, and the lady who had spoken to him from Staple inn entered. He looked at her in astonishment.

"We have met before," said the lady.

"I remember you well, madam. But I am at a loss as to the cause of this visit, for I shall soon be headless, and a headless man cannot serve a lady."

"Nevertheless your height will be improved."

"And would you prefer me shortened?"

"I would. You are too tall."

"You seem interested in cutting me down."

"I am interested in you."

"As Herodias was interested in John the Baptist."

"Your head, I admit, has recently seriously concerned me."

"I regret that I have not the power to give it to you. I can leave it to you by will, but I do not think the courts would regard the bequest of a rebel."

"Doubtless there is some fair maid who would prize your heart."

"If its possession would give you pleasure you would be welcome to it, too, could I bestow it upon you."

"I would not deprive another of a coveted possession."

"There is none other who would prize it. But pray tell me to what may I attribute the honor of this visit?"

"A desire to see more of so good mannered a gentleman."

"I rejoice that my manners please you, madam, and regret that my height does not."

"But you will be shortened."

"My life will not be lengthened."

"You will not die in vain."

"True; I shall have the consolation of giving you pleasure."

"Say, rather, the pleasure of giving me pleasure. My pleasure is yours, is it not?"

"Will you not show your appreciation of my devotion by leaving me to prepare for an end which may come at any moment?"

"Is my presence obnoxious to you?"

"At any other time it would be a pleasure to me."

"But you wish to be alone."

"Only on account of the nearness of death."

"Will nothing ruffle your politeness?"

"Nothing will affect my appreciation for so charming a woman."

"Why did you rebel against King George?"

"I believed Scotland would be benefited by Charles Edward."

"The king is a good man."

"Doubtless."

She handed him a slip of paper. He ran his eye over it. It read:

Let Lady —— have access to her tall rebel, and be hanged to her.

GEORGE R.

Something like a faint smile dawned upon the lips of the prisoner. "His majesty," he said, "is very good to me to permit you to visit me."

"He has been more kind to you than that."

Drawing a piece of parchment from her corsage, she handed it to him. It was a pardon, beautifully engrossed within a decorative border. MacDougal looked up at his visitor for a moment, then sprang toward her and flung his arms about her. Under cover of heartless banter she had been talking the language of love. He had not interpreted her correctly, but now he understood. She suffered—no, returned—the embrace.

"Why did you rejoice at my approaching death?" he asked.

"Because you were an enemy of the king."

"And what changed you?"

"Your manners."

"H'm! Rather a woman's weathercock nature. And you alone have saved me?"

"No; I have been assisted by the Earl of Southerland and all the county of Ross."

The two passed out of the Tower together. History says nothing of the future of either, though they were real characters.

To the Voters of Hancock County:

I am Republican candidate for the office of County Auditor. You have probably noticed my announcement in the papers.

I should like to meet you all, but this will be impossible on account of other duties and lack of time, and not because I think it not worth while. I will see as many as possible, and hope that all will consider my candidacy favorable.

I feel that I am especially prepared to perform the duties of Auditor. Was born and raised on a farm in Butler county, Iowa; took a four years Academy course, and some training in the State Teachers' College; was Deputy Clerk of Courts in Palo Alto county for four years, and in an abstract office and business for fourteen years, eight of which have been in Hancock county; and have been Deputy Sheriff for about three and a half years.

If nominated and elected I shall give my best services and time to the office and endeavor to conduct it to the best interests of the entire County

Yours truly,
W. L. FITKIN.

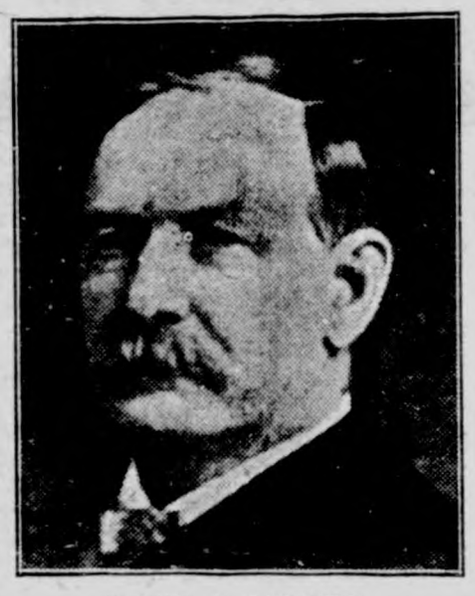
The new scale affects employees engaged in the company's works and factories, but the office men will not be benefited by this increase. Most of the employees who will get the increase are laborers, and the advance applies to all the subsidiary companies in the United States. The company has approximately 70,000 employees. IOWA R. R. COMMISSION HAS PROVEN A GREAT FRIEND TO PEOPLE

Practically All Claims Were Settled Amicably to Satisfaction of Complainants Against Railroads.

Chairman David J. Palmer Gives Interesring Figures

Three Complete Revisions of Iowa Classifications Made During Past Few Years.

Des Moines, Iowa.—Rapidly increasing importace of the Iowa Railroad Commission to the people of Iowa is forcefully shown in a recent statement of the work of the board made by Col. David J. Palmer, of Washington, chairman. Mr. Palmer cites that during his membership on the board the past few years, 2,884 complaints have been made and amicably adjusted. Of this number 8 per cent were dismissed for want of jurisdiction, practically 12 per cent were denied, leaving 2,307 cases that were closed to the satisfaction of the complainants against the railroads.



DAVID J. PALMER.
Chairman Iowa Railway Commission.

During this same brief period 340 rate reductions have been made and but two raises in rates, these being due to errors in classification. Besides these rate reductions the board has promulgated the Famous Joint Rate Order; uniform demurrage rules (of great advantage to shippers); and many other rules giving distinct concessions to shippers of freight in Iowa. Also during this time three complete revisions of the Iowa classifications have been made, involving many months of painstaking care and labor.

Members of the last Iowa General Assembly discovered the enormity of this work when an investigation was made while there was under consideration a bill to establish a general commerce commission. It was demonstrated to the legislators that the Iowa commission is an important institution and that the work that has been done has been of highest value to the people at large throughout the state. That is why the representatives from all over the state refused to abolish this office or combine it with another. The recent report in figures by Chairman David J. Palmer goes further to demonstrate the importance of this board before which shippers and people living on railroads have differences with the corporations amicably settled.

When Daddy Donned the Blue

THE birds are singing there today, just as they did of old,
And phantom feet go down the street—the same old warriors bold;
At Lincoln's call they swell the ranks, all eager for the fight;
I see the shades march thro' the glades—for country, God and right.
From eaves and sill, o'er vale and hill—the Stars and Stripes a-wave,
To fife and drum the legions come, the loyal and the brave.
I see her there upon the stair—oh, mother heart so true—
With tear-dimmed eye, and sweet good-by, when Daddy donned the blue!

YES, Daddy donned the blue, my lads, but hearts were sad that day.
For little Jim—it was his whim—had gone to don the gray.
Dad called him "Baby brother'—his were but 18 years,
"Alas, alack, go bring him back," they said twixt sighs and tears.
My heart it hears, down thro' the years, the echoes sighing there,
When mother-heart poured out its grief, and hands wrung in despair.
But still we sang, till hill tops rang with echoes thro' and thro',
"Hurrah, boys, for the Union,' for Daddy's donned the blue!

"TRAMP, tramp, the boys are marching,' we sing it with a vim.
The train is pulling out, my lads—sing it for the love of him!
'Way down the track, the song came back, and echoes faintly play,
"The Girl I Left Behind Me," till at last they die away.
The regiments, the fields of tents, down by Potomac's shore;
The silent camp, the sentry's tramp, and home, dear home's no more.
They're gone, they're gone, the battle's on, but young hearts never knew
The mother's part, the aching heart, when Daddy donned the blue!

The iron hail rings on the mail—"a bullet for a breath;"
Poor Baby Jim, the feet of him stand shoeless on the line.
With courage there, born of despair—like something half divine;
Face powder-stained, while bullets rained defiant there he stood.
To load and fire at each command and win or die for Hood.
Ah, Baby Jim, a mother's prayer must needs go up for you,
If wrong or right—it is her plight—"God bless the gray and blue!"

THE boy in blue—while carnage grew—with Hooker stood all day,
Until the stars looked down upon ten thousand swept away.
The night was still, o'er vale and hill, Antietam mourned her dead;
No sound was heard, save coo of bird, and silent sentry's tread.
The boy in blue—ah, well he knew, that Jim was ever there;
But what of him? Night's sable rim closed 'round him in despair;
With heart of steel, for woe or weal—he sees the bayonets shine—
With quick advance, leap like a lance, he skims the picket line!

WHAT strange intent! Presentiment? He seeks among the dead;
He feels a touch, a clammy clutch, then lifts his brother's head.
"This message bear, to mother there," said Jim, "I am to blame,
But she'll forgive, if she shall live—my last breath is her name."
"O, Jim, that I had died instead," cried out the boy in blue,
"Her heart bled when you ran away, and now 'twill break for you."
The gen'ral passed, but held him fast; said he—"A spy, I guess,
When I am thro' with th' life o' you, there'll be one Yankee less."

'NAY, general, this is little Jim, my mother's baby Jim.
I promised her, I swore it, sir, that I'd be true to him;
Then when I've covered him with earth, and said my last good-by,
Just tell her this—'twon't be amiss—'for Baby Jim I die.'"
The general spoke, with husky throat, and eyes a little blurred:
"You'd better take the news yourself—my boy, you've kept your word.
Here, take this pass, and clip the grass, here's compliments of mine;
Tell 'Fighting Joe' he'll have a need o' you when he strikes my fighting line."

CARVED on a board, they read, who pass: "To Baby Jim the brave."
While birds a-wing, their requiem sing, above his honored grave.
They're living still, the hearts that thrill to hear the story old.
Where phantom feet go down the street and phantom warriors bold;
No sound of flute, their lips are mute, but shades of heroes come.
As once they came, with hearts aflame, to bugle, fife and drum;
The years go by, with laugh and sigh, but that day seems to stay,
When Daddy donned the blue, my lads, and Baby Jim the gray!

What Soldiers Liked.

No matter how serious the situation nor how near to death the soldiers were, they were always able to exchange a few jokes and to see the comic side of life. As evidence it is related that while in camp at Memphis, Tenn., a great flood came on and the camp of the Union soldiers was put very largely under water. It was the custom of the soldiers to dig large holes in the ground, for disposal of the waste from the camp, and these were covered over, but at the time of the flood the water prevented the passerby from seeing the covering. It was just at this time that Dr. David Evans, whose home was at Boston, below Richmond, and who was a surgeon, made his appearance in a handsome new suit of clothes and went out to visit a certain portion of the camp. In doing so he unfortunately landed on top of one of the waste pits, with the result that he fell through, his new clothes were ruined and he had to stand for a great deal of joking.

STOOD WHERE SHE WAS PUT

Wife Obeyed Orders to the Letter, but Unfortunately Workmen Moved Post Hole.

In a western state workmen began to dig a post hole for an electric light in front of a Dutchman's dwelling, when the master forbade them to continue. After some discussion the Dutchman bade his wife stand on a large, flat slate with which he covered the hole. "Now, Gretchen," he said, "dat ish vhere you shtands till I comes back mit ein enjunction." The solid frau stood there like a statue, her hands on her hips. When the husband disappeared, the leader of the workmen ordered the slate, with the frau on it, to be removed. With perfect politeness the lady was set on one side as if she had been a fat teapot on a salver. The Dutch wife stood like Casabianca, but the hole was well in its place when the householder returned with the injunction. He was overcome with astonishment and wrath. "Vy vas you not stood on dat hole?" he demanded of his wife. "It was on dis stone dat you vas puts me," she answered. He looked at her in helpless indignation a moment, and then cried: "I vas not mean dat you shtand on dat stone ven dat hole was carried away!"—Christian Register.

Willing to Pay for Rammer.

When the British square at the battle of Abu Klea, in the Nubian desert, was penetrated by the dervishes, one of them attempted to spear a gunner who was in the act of ramming home a charge. The Briton brained the Sudanese, but the rammer head split on the man's hard skull. Next day the gunner was sent for. Mistaking the reason, and knowing from experience that soldiers are charged for government property which they break, he led off with: "Please, sir, I'm very sorry I broke the rammer, but I never thought the fellow's head could be so hard. I'll pay for the rammer so as to hear no more of the case."

The LITTLE BROWN JUG at KILDARE

SYNOPSIS.

Thomas Ardmore and Henry Maine Griswold stumble upon intrigue when the governors of North and South Carolina are reported to have quarreled. Griswold allies himself with Barbara Osborne, daughter of the governor of South Carolina, while Ardmore espouses the cause of Jerry Dangerfield, daughter of the governor of North Carolina. These two young ladies are trying to fill the shoes of their fathers, while the latter are missing. Both states are in a turmoil over one Appleweight, an outlaw with great political influence. Unaware of each other's position, both Griswold and Ardmore set out to make the other prosecute Appleweight. Valuable papers in the Appleweight case are missing from the office of Gov. Osborne and Griswold places the theft at the door of the scheming attorney general. Ardmore charters a caboose and starts for the border to plan the arrest of Appleweight. Jerry meanwhile, is a guest at Ardsley.

CHAPTER IX.—Continued.

When they sought a lonely siding to allow a belated passenger train to pass, the conductor brewed coffee and cooked supper, and Ardmore called in the detectives and trainmen. The sense of knowing real people, whose daily occupations were so novel and interesting, touched him afresh with delight. These men said much in few words. One of the detectives chaffed Cooke covertly about some adventure in which they had been jointly associated.

"I never thought they'd get the lead out of you after that business in Missouri. You were a regular mine," said the detective to Cooke, and Cooke glanced deprecatingly at Ardmore.

"He's the little joker, all right."

"You can't kill him," remarked the detective. "I've seen it tried."

Before the train started the detectives crawled back into their car, and Cooke drew out some blankets, tossed them on a bench for Ardmore, and threw himself down without ado. Ardmore held to his post in the tower, as lone as the lookout in a crow's-nest. The night air swept more coolly in as they neared the hills, and the train's single brakeman came down as though descending from the sky, rubbed the cinders from his eyes, and returned to his vigil armed with a handful of Ardmore's cigars.

For the greater part of the night they enjoyed a free track, and thumped the rails at a lively clip. Shortly after midnight Ardmore crawled below and went to sleep. At five o'clock Cooke called him.

"We're on the switch at Kildare. One of your men is here waiting for you."

Big Paul, the German forester, was called in, and Ardmore made his toilet in a pail of water while listening to the big fellow's report. Cooke joined in the conversation, and Ardmore was gratified to see that the two men met on common ground in discussing the local geography. The forester described in clear, straightforward English just what he had done. He had distributed his men well through the hills, and they were now posted as pickets on points favorable for observation. They had found along the streams four widely scattered stills, and these were being watched. Paul drew a small map, showing the homes of the most active members of the Appleweight gang, and Ardmore indicated all these points as nearly as possible on the county map he had brought with him.

"Here's Raccoon creek, and my own land runs right through there—just about here, isn't it Paul? I always remember the creek, because I like the name so much."

"You are right, Mr. Ardmore. The best timber you have lies along there, and your land crosses the North Carolina boundary into South Carolina about here. There's Mingo county, South Carolina, you see."

"Well, that dashes me!" exclaimed Ardmore, striking the table with his fist. "I never knew one state from another, but you must be right."

"I'm positive of it, Mr. Ardmore. One of my men has been living there on the creek to protect your timber. Some of these outlaws have been cutting off our wood."

"It seems to me I remember the place. There's a log house hanging on the creek. You took me by it once, but it never entered my head that the state line was so close."

"It runs right through the house! And some one, years ago, blazed the trees along there, so it is very easy to tell when you step from one state to another. My man left there recently, refusing to stay any longer. These Appleweight people thought he was a spy, and posted a notice on his door warning him to leave, so I shifted him to the other end of the estate."

"Did you see the sheriff at Kildare?"

"I haven't seen him. When I asked for him yesterday I found he had left town and gone to Greensboro to see his sick uncle."

Ardmore laughed and slapped his knee.

"Who takes care of the dungeon while he's away?"

"There are no prisoners in the Kildare jail. The sheriff's afraid to keep any; and he's like the rest of the people around here. They all live in terror of Appleweight."

"Appleweight is a powerful character in these parts," said Cooke, pouring the coffee he had been making, and handing a tin cupful to Ardmore. "He's tolerable well off, and could make money honestly if he didn't operate stills, rob country stores, mix up in politics, and steal horses when he and his friends need them."

"I guess he has never molested us any, has he, Paul?" asked Ardmore, not a little ashamed of his ignorance of his own business.

"A few of our cows stray away sometimes and never come back. And for two years we have lost the corn out of the crib away over here near the deer park."

"We don't want to lose our right to the track, and we must get out of this before the whole community comes to take a look at us," said Cooke, swinging out of the caboose.

Ardmore talked frankly to the forester, having constant recourse to the map; and Paul sketched roughly a new chart, making roads and paths so far as he knew them, and indicating clearly where the Ardsley boundaries extended. Then Ardmore took a blue pencil and drew a straight line.

"When we get Appleweight, we want to hurry him from Dilwell county, North Carolina, into Mingo county, South Carolina. We will go to the county town there, and put him in jail. If the shariff of Mingo is weak-kneed, we will lock Appleweight up anyhow, and telegraph the governor of South Carolina that the joke is on him."

"We will catch the man," said Paul gravely, "but we may have to kill him."

"Dead or alive, he's got to be caught," said Ardmore.

Cooke came out of the station and signaled the engineer to go ahead.

"We'll pull down here about five miles to an old spur where the company used to load wood. There's a little valley there where we can be hidden all we please, so far as the main line is concerned, and it might not be a bad idea to establish headquarters there. We have the tools for cutting in on the telegraph, and we can be as independent as we please. I told the agent we were carrying company powder for a blasting job down the line, and he suspects nothing."

Paul left the caboose as the train started, and rode away on horseback to visit his pickets. The train crept warily over the spur into the old wood-cutters' camp, where, as Cooke had forecast, they were quite shut in from the main line by hills and woodland.

"And now, Mr. Ardmore, if you would like to see fire-water spring out of the earth as freely as spring water, come with me for a little stroll. The thirsty of Dilwell county know the way to these places as city topers know the way to a bar. We are now in the land of the little brown jug, and while these boys get breakfast I'll see if the people in this region have changed their habits."

It was not yet seven as they struck off into the forest beside the cheerful little brook that came down singing from the hills. Ardmore had rarely before in his life been abroad so early, and he kicked the dew from the grass in the cheerfullest spirit imaginable.

Cooke had not been in this region for seven years, and yet he never hesitated, but walked steadily on, following the little brook. Presently he bent over the bank and gathered up a brownish substance that floated on the water, lifted a little of it in his palm and sniffed it.

"That," said Cooke, holding it to Ardmore's nose, "is corn mash. That's what they make their liquor of. The still is probably away up yonder on that hillside."

He crossed the stream on a log, climbed the bank on the opposite shore, and scanned the near landscape for a few minutes. Then he pointed to an old stump over which vines had grown in wild profusion.

"If you will walk to that stump, Mr. Ardmore, and feel under the vines on the right-hand side, your fingers will very likely touch something smooth and cool."

Ardmore obeyed instructions. He thrust his hand into the stump as Cooke directed, thrust again a little deeper, and laughed aloud as he drew out a little brown jug.

Cooke nodded approvingly.

"We're all right. The revenue men come in here occasionally and smash the stills and arrest a few men, but the little brown jug continues to do business at the same old stand. If you have a dollar handy, slip it under the stump, so they'll know we're not stingy."

Ardmore was scrutinizing the jug critically.

"They're all alike," said Cooke, "but that piece of calico is a new one—just a fancy touch for an extra fine article of liquor."

"I'll be shot if I haven't seen that calico before," said Ardmore; and he sat down on a boulder and drew out the stopper, while Cooke watched him with interest.

The bit of twine was indubitably the same that he had unwound before in his room at the Guilford house, and the cob parted in his fingers exactly as before. On a piece of brown paper that had been part of a tobacco wrapper was scrawled:

This ain't yore fight, Mr. Ardmore. Wher's the guvner of North Carolina?

"That's a new one on me," laughed Cooke. "You see, they know everything. Mind-reading isn't in it with them. They know who we are and what we have come for. What's the point about the governor?"

"Oh, the governor's all right," replied Ardmore carelessly. "He wouldn't bother his head about a little matter like this. The powers reserved to the states by the constitution give a governor plenty of work without acting as policeman of the jungle. That's the reason I said to Gov. Dangerfield, 'Governor,' I said, 'don't worry about this Appleweight business. Time is heavy on my hands,' I said. 'You stay in Raleigh and uphold the dignity of your office, and I will take care of the trouble in Dilwell.' And you can't understand, Cooke, how his face brightened at my words. Being the brave man he is, you would naturally expect him to come down here in person and seize these scoundrels with his own hands. I had the hardest time of my life to get him to stay at home. It almost broke his heart not to come."

And as they retraced their steps to the caboose, it was Ardmore who led, stepping briskly along, and blithely swinging the jug.

CHAPTER X.

Prof. Griswold Takes the Field.

Barbara and Griswold stopped at the telegraph office on their way back to the executive mansion, and were met with news that the sheriff of Mingo had refused to receive Griswold's message.

"His private lines of communication with the capital are doubtless well established," said Griswold, "and Bosworth probably warned him, but it isn't of great importance. It's just as well for Appleweight and his friends, high and low, to show their hands."

When they were again on the veranda, Griswold lingered for a moment with no valid excuse for delay beyond the loveliness of the night and his keen delight in Barbara's voice and her occasional low laughter, which was so pleasant to hear that he held their talk to a light key, that he might evoke it the more.

"You have done all that could be asked of you, Mr. Griswold, and I cannot permit you to remain longer. Father will certainly be here to-morrow."

"Oh, but your father isn't absent! He is officially present and in the saddle," laughed Griswold. "You must not admit, even to me, that he is not here in full charge of his office. And as for my leaving the field, I have not the slightest intention of going back to Virginia until the Appleweight ghost is laid, the governor of North Carolina brought to confusion, and the governor of South Carolina visibly present and thundering his edicts again, so to speak, ex cathedra. My own affairs can wait, Miss Osborne. The joy of having a hand in a little affair like this, and of being able to tell my friend Tommy Ardmore about it afterward, would be sufficient. Ardmore will never speak to me again for not inviting him to a share in the game."

Peasant Girl's Treasure

Members of the well known Romanian family of Ghika, who are resident in Vienna, received some interesting information from Jassy to-day, says the London Telegraph. A number of cases filed with objects of gold and silver, with jewelry and diamonds, estimated to be worth several million kronen, were found in the course of a search made by the police in the house of a peasant woman named Safta Bradinarin, living in the environs of Jassy.

This woman, who was at once arrested, stated that the cases had been concealed in her house for 26 years. Her deceased daughter was in the service of Prince Nikolai Ghika, who died suddenly after an operation in Paris. The peasant's daughter Maria took several sealed cases which no one appeared to want, and conveyed them to her home. She was afraid to attempt to dispose of the valuable objects, which have until now remained hidden in her mother's house.

Lure of the Club.

It is not at all true, as some people aver, that the lure of the club is the spirituous refreshment to be found there or its aloofness from the restraining eye of critical womankind But it is true that it represents the highest development along lines of physical comfort as this is known and sought for by the animal man, and if the ladies, on the few days of the year when they are admitted within the doors of these sanctuaries of masculine luxury, would study what they see there they would speedily be made aware, by the objects visible before them, of the sort of indoor environment that most appeals to the soul of the average man.—John Kendrick Bangs, in Suburban Life.

The Limit.

"My only daughter eloped. And I'll never forgive her!"

"Now, look here, old man, remember—"

"Remember? Yes, I'd be decent about it, if she'd let well enough alone. But she not only eloped—she came back home!"

A MINISTER'S CONSTIPATION

Rev. Kemp Tells of His Digestive Troubles and How He Overcame Them—You Can Do So Free.

The lack of exercise in a minister's life makes him very prone to constipation—but for that matter, most everybody is constipated now and then. It is the national disorder.

Dr. W. B. Caldwell
Look for this picture on the package

Many already know that a sure way to cure constipation and other stomach, liver and bowel troubles is with Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin, which church people have been buying for twenty years. Rev. R. A. Kemp of Rising Sun, Ind., Secretary of the Indiana Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church, says in part:

"For years I have been a victim of constipation but I have never found anything to equal Dr. Caldwell's Syrup Pepsin. I also had indigestion and heart trouble. I can certainly recommend it."

It can be bought of any druggist at 50 cents or $1 a bottle. If there is anything about your case that you don't understand, write to the doctor. If you have never used this remedy and would like to try it, send your address and a free sample bottle will be forwarded to your home. Address Dr. W. B. Caldwell, 201 Caldwell Bldg., Monticello, Ill.

Wedding Fee Counterfeit.

A well-dressed stranger entered the office of Justice William B. Williams, Montclair, N. J., and after shaking hands astonished the justice by saying: "I'm here to redeem that counterfeit $10 bill I passed on you. Two years ago I called on you with my girl and two witnesses and you married us. I handed you a $10 bill. I had a counterfeit in my pocketbook that I'd carried for several years. I never missed it until yesterday. Then I remembered that I'd accidentally handed you the bill." The caller produced a good $10 bill, but the justice refused to take it. "Don't let that worry you, my dear fellow," he laughed. "I never knew it was a counterfeit. No kind of money sticks to me over night. I'm married, myself."

Very Fishy.

She was a fisherman's daughter, she wore her hair in a net, and she preferred love in a piscatorial way.

"My love," he whispered, "you hold first 'place' in my heart! Although I 'flounder' about in expressing myself, my 'sole' wish is that you will save me from becoming a 'crabbed' old bachelor. I shall stick to you closer than a 'limpet,' from you a 'wink'll' be the road to guide me. Together we will 'skate' over life's 'rocks,' and when I look at your hand beside me I shall say to myself: 'Fortune was mine when I put 'herring' there!'"

And then the lady dropped her eyes in sweet confusion, and murmured:

"Pass the salt."

For the Critics.

Creston Clark, whose untimely death at Asheville robbed America of a serious and capable actor, was somewhat impatient of criticism. To a Philadelphia critic he once said:

"You chaps are unwilling to accept a man for what he is. You want to change him to your own taste. But each of you has a different taste. To whose inclination, then, is he to bend?

"No, no! Take the artist for what he is. That is the right critical attitude. Don't be like the farm urchin I once saw—an urchin who, as he stoned a frog to death, repeated severely:

"'I'll l'arn ye to be a toad.'"

An Instance.

"The rubber industry ought to be able to solve one financial problem."

"What problem?"

"That of elastic currency."

High Finance.

Knicker—Why did you pay $40.53 for that hat?

Mrs. Knicker—I had to do it to make my check book balance.

To the Publisher of the Klemme Times:

In your paper, issue May 5th I read an attack on a Lutheran minister, preaching a funeral sermon in the German Methodist church in your city. Who the attacked party is anyone can see, that knows what transpired the week before at Klemme. As you have published the attack, I hope for justice sake, you will also publish the answer.

I am astonished of the rich imagination and am frightful of the wrath of the "holy man," the writer of the attack. He starts out thus: "For some reason it is seldom that a Lutheran minister enters a Methodist pulpit." He, the writer, seems to be ignorant, that it was not my choice that I preached the funeral sermon in his church. I did not select it, I did not beg him to allow me to use his church. When I arrived at Klemme at about 11 o'clock I was informed the funeral would be in the Methodist church. A Lutheran minister can preach the word of God anywhere, if no other place, in the open air. He further states "That we enjoyed (?) this pleasure last week." Well and good! and I hope it did him some good. The aggrieved gentleman complains that "he and Rev. Achtermann were present but were ignored entirely." The writer, as a minister, has surely heard something of church history. If this is a fact, he also ought to know that there are some differences in doctrine between the Lutheran and the Methodist church, and therefore between him and me, and on account of his false doctrine I flatly refuse to have anything to do with him in an official way.

As far as Rev. Achtermann, for whom the writer of the attack seems also to speak, is concerned I must say that I did not know that such a gentleman was in existence. I do not know him, and do not know him to this day, did not know that he was present and did not know that he wished to take part in the proceedings. As a Reformed minister he ought to know and knows that this cannot be done. The writer complains furthermore: That I brought my daughter with me to play the organ. I must confess that I am unable to play any instrument and I wanted someone to preside at the organ. If I had known the complainant wanted this honor, I would have given my permission for him to do so. But wait, next time when a Lutheran minister enters a Methodist pulpit, you shall have the honor to preside at the organ. So much I shall allow you. Then in proceeding he makes fun of my singing. Now my dear sir, let us rent a hall at Garner—Klemme is too small a place—and let us compare our singing before a large audience. We will find pretty quick who can sing the better, you or I. He says that I asked the congregation to sing. Surely not his congregation. That his people could not sing I know from the "pious man" himself, because they had no books. Then about the choir. "They only had a chance to sing once and that was at the rear end." If I had that funeral today, they even would not sing once. Why I allowed them to sing once is mine and not his business He claims that he "insisted" that his choir should sing once. When and where was that? I am not the man to take orders from a man that could learn some things from my school children. He asserts "That there was more sympathy and spirit of Christ in the song than in the minister's sermon." I do not doubt his words as far as he is himself concerned. I did not expect him to understand a plain address on a plain text. He calls me a "poor fellow." Verily, I am not endowed and blessed with worldy goods as the irate gentleman, although I have plenty, but I am richer than he is, I have the word of God and preach it wherever it is my duty to do. Can the gentleman claim and prove this of him also? The antagonist bewails "That I seldom mingle with people of other churches." No, sir, I do not! I am not one of your kind. I do not hunt after people which are under the care of their minister. I work where it is my duty to work and stay away from people belonging to other churches, even to the Methodist church. What he says about me preaching Christ and not imitating His spirit, I ask. What does he know of Christ's word and the spirit thereof? If a man is not fit to preach the word of God as it is written, what does he know about the spirit of Christ? I suggest to this imaginative and irate hero to look up the following passages and apply them, not through his glasses, but apply them as they read and he will probably understand why I ignored him by officiating at a funeral in his church. 2 Cor. 6, 14-15. Rom. 16, 17. Matth. 7, 15. 1 John 4, 1 and similar.

In regard the attack in the same article on another party, I have only this to say. The "impudence" he complains of is not on the other side, but on the holy man's side. It surely shows what spirit is in him. But let the attacked party defend himself.

This incident is closed for me by this statement, as I have no time to make answer to such people, who are always loaded with a half a dozen so-called sermons and are ready to rasp them off at any time and feel offended when they cannot be accorded this privilege.

The graduating exercises held at the opera house last Friday evening were very well attended. The program was most interesting. The address by Prof. G. F. Barbalou was a masterly one and while it was instructive to a high degree, it was within the understanding of the average school child. The home talent portion of the program was up to Klemme's usual high standard.

Did we, or did we not? That is the question that is agitating the minds of astronomers all over the world. The earth was scheduled to pass through the caudal appendage of Halley's comet on the night of May 18th, but if it did, it was not noticeable. Some astronomers claim we did, some claim we didn't, some claim the comet stubbed its toe on a star and broke its tail off, while others advance various other theories. Blast the comet anyway. It is not even visible in the west after sundown as it should be if it were a well behaved comet. We have lost lots of sleep trying to get a glimpse of the monstrosity but nary a glimpse did we get Well, let it go. The total eclipse of the moon showed up on schedule time Monday night as advertised—and that's something.

Therefore Caller Could Only Guess Who Had Taught Youngster to Stand on His Head.

"The venerable countess of Cardigan, the author, you know, of that wicked book of memoirs, thinks the modern girl is too athletic and hoydenish," said an English visitor to New York.

"The countess of Cardigan often tells of a young man who was drinking tea with a beautiful girl when her little brother slipped into the room.

"'Mr. Mannering,' the boy asked, 'can you stand on your head?'

"'No, said the visitor, laughing, 'I don't believe I can.'

"'Well, I can,' said the boy. 'Look here.'

"And he stood on his head very neatly in the corner.

"'Ha, ha!' laughed Mr. Mannering. 'And who taught you that?'

"The urchin frowned.

"'Sister,' he said, 'told me I must never tell.'"

Governor Urges Smaller Farms.

Afton.—In delivering the commencement oration before the graduating class of the Afton high school Governor Carroll urged two propositions, better educated men and women and smaller farms. His masterful address was a plea for education as a great factor in not only making better wives and husbands of the young people of today, but as one of the solutions of the rural problem which confronts Iowa. The address was a strong one, comparing present day rural school conditions with the past. The governor painted a glowing picture of the educational conditions of today and declared that education must not be book learning, but a development of character.

Frisky Colt Injures Two.

Creston.—A vicious dog attacked a young frisky colt which D. S. Doig and his father-in-law were driving, causing the colt to upset the vehicle, injuring both men. It is feared Mr. Faler has received serious internal injuries, besides a broken rib. Mr. Doig's injuries were not dangerous.

Iowans Win Dual Debate.

Cedar Falls.—The debating teams from the State Teachers' college won two unanimous decisions from the State Normal school of Emporia, Kas. "Parcels Post for the United States" was the subject discussed, each side discussing the affirmative and negative at Cedar Falls and Emporia.

Thought Comet Struck Hotel.

Cedar Falls.—When a gas range in the Fortner hotel at Waverly exploded thirty guests rushed into the halls in night attire, thinking the comet had struck the hotel. The hotel was damaged and the chef slightly injured.

Insane Farmer Hangs Himself.

Oskaloosa.—Isaac M. Clark, a farmer living three miles east of here, committed suicide by hanging himself. Temporary insanity caused by ill health and financial trouble is said to be the cause.

Noted Iowa Farmer Dead.

Manchester, Iowa.—The funeral of Mr. L. G. Clute, one of the most prominent farmers in this section of Iowa, was held from his home in Honey Creek township, burial being made in the Greeley cemetery. Mr. Clute enjoyed a national reputation for his skill in raising products for exhibition purposes, and the exhibits grown by him have taken prizes at every agricultural exhibition of importance held in the United States during the past generation. His first exhibit was made in 1876 at the centennial exposition held in Philadelphia. At the New Orleans exposition in 1895, at which gathering Mr. Clute was a member of the Iowa commission, his products were awarded 50 medals and 300 diplomas. The Iowa exhibits at the Chicago, St. Louis and Omaha expositions were arranged by him. He has had a large exhibit of farm products at every state fair Iowa has ever held, and invariably his display received a high classification.

Lewis G. Clute was born in Genesee county, New York, Oct. 8, 1836. He received his early education in that state and taught school there for several years. In 1858 he came to Iowa and commenced farming, and in 1860 he was married to Miss Melissa Roe. Four children were born to them, of whom William H. of Oneida township, Charles A. and Louis A., both of Honey Creek township, are now living. Mr. Clute owned one of the best farms in Delaware county and conducted a large farming business, into which his sons were taken in partnership several years ago. He had spent the past winter at Clermont, Fla., in the hope that his health might be benefited, and returned home in April apparently much improved. His death occurred at his home in Honey Creek township, due to a general breaking down of the system.

Dog Mothers Five Pigs.

Marshalltown.—Five little pigs, sucking an adopted mother, who is a dog, is a novel sight afforded a south side neighborhood in this city. E. R. Plum has a hog which farrowed several days ago and then refused to care for her offspring. At about the same time the family dog brought a litter of puppies into the world. Plum decided to become a "nature faker" and killed the puppies and placed the pigs with the mother dog. The old dog took them as her own and the pigs are becoming fat and strong. Because the little babies are not inclined to romp and play, as the old dog thinks they should, she has been seen to become angry for a moment, pick up a squealing little mass of flesh in her mouth and shake it severely. The treatment, however does not affect the disposition of the tiny porkers, who are content to lie still and eat.

Arthur Golden Wedding.

Ida Grove.—Mr. and Mrs. Enoch Churchhill of Arthur, Ida county, celebrated their golden wedding anniversary. Mr. Churchill was born near Bristol, England, in 1830, came to America in 1852 and was apprenticed to a carpenter in New York. In the fall of 1855 he came west to Clinton and in May, 1860, married Susan Williams at DeWitt. Mr. Churchill served throughout the civil war in the Twenty-sixth Iowa Infantry.

Elks Dedicate New Home.

Marshalltown. — With impressive ceremonies, ritualistic in character, the new $40,000 club house built by Marshall lodge No. 312, B. P. O. E., was dedicated. The building is one of the finest in the country for the amount of money invested. The speakers at the dedication were Charles S. Bradshaw of Des Moines, district deputy grand exalted ruler, and Jerry B. Sullivan of Des Moines. A banquet and dancing followed the dedication.

Celebrate Golden Wedding.

Le Mars.—Mr. and Mrs. W. M. Clagg, old residents of this place, celebrated their fiftieth wedding anniversary. They were married at Clinton, Ill., May 11, 1860 and came to Le Mars in 1887. Mr. Clagg is seventy-one years of age and his wife is three years younger. He served on the staff of General E. H. Hobson of Kentucky in General Thomas' brigade in the civil war.

Bad Fire at Ida Grove.

Ida Grove.—In a big blaze, which for four hours threatened the whole business portion of the town, the D. C. Barnes saloon property, his livery barn occupied by Charles M. Smith, and the implement house of Martin Sauer, were completely destroyed and nine horses burned to death.

Rob Mondamin Post Office.

Mondamin.—The safe in the postoffice at this place was blown open by burglars and about $150 in money, besides a large quantity of stamps, being secured. The force of the explosion awakened a few people, but no one investigated the matter at the time and no alarm was given.

Answer This Question

When shown positive and reliable proof that a certain remedy had cured numerous cases of female ills, wouldn't any sensible woman conclude that the same remedy would also benefit her if suffering with the same trouble?

Here are two letters which prove the efficiency of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

Fitchville, Ohio.—"My daughter was all run down, suffered from pains in her side, head and limbs, and could walk but a short distance at a time. She came very near having nervous prostration, had begun to cough a good deal and seemed meiancholy by spells. She tried two doctors but got little help. Since taking Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound Blood Purifier and Liver Pills she has improved so much that she feels and looks like another girl."—Mrs. C. Cole, Fitchville, Ohio.

Irasburg, Vermont.—"I feel it my duty to say a few words in praise of your medicine. When I began taking it I had been very sick with kidney and bladder troubles and nervous prostration. I am now taking the sixth bottle of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound and find myself greatly improved. My friends who call to see me have noticed a great change."—Mrs. A. H. Sanborn, Irasburg, Vermont.

We will pay a handsome reward to any person who will prove to us that these letters are not genuine and truthful—or that either of these women were paid in any way for their testimonials, or that the letters are published without their permission, or that the original letter from each did not come to us entirely unsolicited.

What more proof can any one ask?

For 30 years Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound has been the standard remedy for female ills. No sick woman does justice to herself who will not try this famous medicine. Made exclusively from roots and herbs, and has thousands of cures to its credit.

Mrs. Pinkham invites all sick women to write her for advice. She has guided thousands to health free of charge. Address Mrs. Pinkham, Lynn, Mass.

YOUNG COUPLE DEAD

KILLS SELF BESIDE HIS WIFE

Physician Accused, But Husband Leaves Note Declaring Wife Insisted Upon Having Unlawful Operation Performed.

Hamburg, Ia., May 22.—Mr. and Mrs. Perry Noblitt, a young married couple who resided on a fine farm near Hamburg, were buried together Saturday forenoon in a little cemetery near where the two were reared, while friends of Dr. Arnold Jolly, a leading physician of Hamburg, were renewing their efforts to secure $3,000 bond for Jolly and also an attorney to represent him at the preliminary hearing. Mr. Jolly is informally charged with the murder of Mrs. Perry Noblitt, whose tragic death, less than an hour later, was followed by the suicide of her young husband.

A deep aversion to maternity appears now to have been the primary cause of the tragedy which has shaken Fremont county from end to end. Mr. and Mrs. Perry Noblitt visited Hamburg and were seen in the vicinity of Dr. Jolly's office for some hours, apparently waiting for Jolly's return from the country. Shortly after midnight neighbors of the Noblitts were shocked to hear of the death of the young couple, both of whom were found lifeless on a bed at home, the husband with a bullet hole in his head. The carriage in which they had driven from town was covered with blood and the circumstances indicated that Mrs. Noblitt had died en route home from town, that her husband had carried her into the house and had then killed himself.

Mrs. Noblitt's death, according to testimony given at the inquest, was caused from a criminal operation. When neighbor women started a fire in the kitchen the following was found hidden in the oven of the kitchen stove:

"Fannie and I are both to blame for our deaths. She died first, on the road home from town. I dressed her the best I could. Life is not worth living without her. Perry."

At the bottom of the sheet were these words:

"Jolly did it all; she would have it done."

Upon the strength of this note an information was filed against Dr. Jolly and he was arrested and placed in jail. The dead people were members of Fremont county's most prominent families.

County Attorney Norcutt has the case in charge.

Old Men in Responsibility.

The American business system, which gives mere boys responsible positions before they have acquired practical experience, is to an Englishman quite unaccountable. He wonders whether it does not cause reckless trading and wild speculation. In other countries they prefer to keep elderly men in responsible positions because they can be depended upon. Messrs. Dyke & Sons, Somerset, England, employ 66 men. More than half have completed 30 years' service, 20 have been there 40 years, nine over 50 years and one 70 years.

MONTREAL AND QUEBEC.

A veritable edition de luxe among railroad pamphlets has been issued by the Grand Trunk Railway System to proclaim amongst tourists the glories of the cities of Montreal and Quebec. It gives an interesting description of the two most interesting cities in Canada, with many illustrations from photographs. Sent free to any address. Apply to W. S. Afraid of Ghosts

Many people are afraid of ghosts. Few people are afraid of germs. Yet the ghost is a fancy and the germ is a fact. If the germ could be magnified to a size equal to its terrors it would appear more terrible than any fire-breathing dragon. Germs can't be avoided. They are in the air we breathe, the water we drink.

The germ can only prosper when the condition of the system gives it free scope to establish itself and develop. When there is a deficiency of vital force, languor, restlessness, a sallow cheek, a hollow eye, when the appetite is poor and the sleep is broken, it is time to guard against the germ. You can fortify the body against all germs by the use of Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery. It increases the vital power, cleanses the system of clogging impurities, enriches the blood, puts the stomach and organs of digestion and nutrition in working condition, so that the germ finds no weak or tainted spot in which to breed. "Golden Medical Discovery" contains no alcohol, whisky or habit-forming drugs. All its ingredients printed on its outside wrapper. It is not a secret nostrum but a medicine OF KNOWN COMPOSITION and with a record of 40 years of cures. Accept no substitute—there is nothing "just as good." Ask your neighbors.

RETRIBUTION.

By PHILIP ATTERBURY.

[Copyright, 1910, by American Press Association.]

I was at work at my easel one morning when I received a visit from a lady who was a perfect stranger to me. I arose to receive her and was about to ask her how I could serve her when she said eagerly:

"Where is Edward Borland?"

"Edward Borland!"

"Yes. Do you know where I can find him?"

"I never heard of the gentleman."

"You painted the picture 'Retribution,' didn't you, on exhibition at Martine's?"

"I did."

"From what did you take my likeness? I never sat for you."

"My good lady, will you explain?"

"Explain! Why harrow my feelings by forcing me to tell the distressing story when you must know it already. Else how could you have painted that awful scene?"

"What awful scene?"

"Do cease the pretense of ignorance. I suppose it was he who told you."

My bewilderment was increasing rather than subsiding, for I noticed a resemblance, though a very faint one, between the lady before me and a figure in the picture to which she referred. In fact, I was dumfounded. I did nothing but stare at her. She went on speaking in her quick, excited way, her eyes filling with tears:

"It was all my fault. I urged him to take the money and speculate for me. The stocks went down. Ten days after the loss was reported to me by the brokers he had learned of it and made it good out of his own pocket. Indeed, he wrote me that there was a profit. The stupid brokers called on me for margin during his absence, at the height of the panic. He had distinctly told them to look to him and by no means communicate with me. But why did you call your picture 'Retribution?' At the moment I reproached him he had ordered a check sent me for $6,000. I received it after he had gone."

A light was beginning to break in upon my brain. I had read of cases where persons had fancied themselves the subjects of artists' work, and it struck me that I had met with an instance. I was interested in the lady's story. Might I not be of service in restoring to her a person she had wronged? The picture, too, corresponded with the scene to which she referred. A woman was reproaching a man who had wronged her, while he stood with bowed head, receiving his chastisement. The woman was the principal figure; the man was in shadow and his face not distinctly visible. I concluded to temporize with her.

"And did he not defend himself?" I asked.

"No; he simply stood and looked at me in astonishment. His figure in your picture doesn't show his demeanor at all."

"He left you with no explanation?"

"None whatever. Ten minutes after his departure the postman left his letter containing his check for what I had given him—the profit. Profit, indeed! The transaction cost him $7,500."

I pondered, while she went on incoherently in the same manner as before. Finally I said to her, "If you will leave me your address I will see if I can do anything for you."

"There! I knew all the while you were acquainted with him and that he gave you the information which led to your painting that picture. Oh, please do tell him how sorry I am for what I did."

"Yes, if I find him."

The lady departed somewhat comforted, but by no means confident that I would succeed in gaining for her the forgiveness of the man she had wronged.

How I found Edward Borland is a matter between me and a man I paid for doing the work. When I met Mr. Borland he supposed the meeting was casual. I pursued the acquaintance and invited him to my studio, where I had the picture from Martine's conspicuously displayed on an easel. I watched him as he looked at it. The woman's face evidently interested him.

"Where did you get your model for that figure?" he asked.

This was a beginning. Before he left my studio I had told him the story of my visitor and her illusion. When his wonder at the singular occurrence had given place to thinking on the situation between himself and the lady I saw his face harden. If I effected a reconciliation I must use the utmost adroitness.

"She was very bitter," he said, "when she supposed I had lost her money."

"Naturally," I remarked.

"She gave me carte blanche to do as I thought best for her, to win or lose as the market rose or fell, and when it fell she reproached me."

"As was to be expected from any woman and as would be the result in the case of most men. Women don't possess the poise to stand that sort of thing. Granting that you were excusable for accepting such a commission, you could only expect that it would be 'heads you win, tails you lose.'"

Before he left I secured his promise to meet the lady in question in my studio the next morning. I notified her to come, and she no sooner saw her former lover there than I, as an artist, caught the penitent, pleading look on her face for my next picture. I marked the first "Retribution I." and the second "Retribution II."

When my friend Mrs. Borland gets obstreperous her husband tells me that I had better paint a third picture with him in the foreground and call it "Retribution III." His wife fails to understand why.

GENERAL NEWS.

The trump card in the prosecution of Charles R. Heike, secretary of the American Sugar Refining company, was played at the sugar trust underweighing conspiracy trial when Prosecutor Simpson called as the government's first witness Oliver Spitzer, superintendent of the Williamsburg docks, who some months ago was convicted of underweighing and sentenced to two years in the federal penitentiary.

The Standard Oil company has increased the wages of its workmen from 6 to 10 per cent. The order is retroactive and became effective May 1. It is estimated that the company will add from $6,000,000 to $10,000,000 to its annual pay roll expense. The new scale affects employees engaged in the company's works and factories, but the office men will not be benefited by this increase. Most of the employees who will get the increase are laborers, and the advance applies to all the subsidiary companies in the United States. The company has approximately 70,000 employees. The Standard is one of the very few big concerns of this country which has never had a strike among its employees.

Oliver Spitzer, former superintendent of the docks of the American Sugar Refining company in Williamsburg, explained in court at New York why he did not confess during the trial which ended last February with his being sentenced to two years at Atlanta. CITIES TO CLEAN UP

Dr. G. H. Sumner Talks at Undertaker's Convention

A CAMPAIGN OF SANITATIOM

Secretary of State Health Board Gives City Officials and Private Individuals Some Good Advice on Cleanliness.

Des Moines, May 30.—City officials responsible for the cleanliness of the city streets and alleys who shirk their duty came in for a scoring at the convention of the Iowa Funeral Directors' association at the Coliseum by Dr. G. H. Sumner, secretary of the state board of health. Dr. Sumner talked on "Sanitation" and incidentally took the opportunity to score the private property owner who does not keep his premises clean and sanitary.

"Every day you men come in contact with diseases and conditions which would wipe out the human race were we to care for our bodies as most cities care for their streets, alleys and the construction of buildings," he said. "It is alarming the little attention paid to sanitary conditions, both by the city and private owner. Every city should undergo a cleaning often and here let me say that I am a firm believer in cremation for all refuse matter in any city. Dumping grounds are only pest houses for the hatching of germs. Here flies congregate and are the disseminators of disease. No city can be accounted clean until its ordinances require every cellar door to be widely opened to the sun and air, that royal pair of germicides; every vellar to be emptied of its refuse, every cellar wall and ceiling to be scraped and whitewashed, every cellar floor to be taken up if rotten and sprinkled with lime if uncovered, a tremendous and expensive process, but effective sanitation, costly as it must need be, is cheap beside the outlay of a single epidemic."

Dr. Sumner urged a national campaign of sanitation by the government and said that the value of the labor lost each year from those who died from preventable diseases would more than pay the cost of such a campaign.

Student Has Strange Malady.

Mason City.—Marshall Palmer, student in the High school, is at his home in a very serious condition, unable to move a muscle or speak a word. He is only 16 years old and while the trouble much resembles paralysis the attending physician is not just sure of it. He has been in this condition for about a week. These cases are very rare and the doctor thinks that if he lives at all and recovers one or all his limbs will be paralyzed.

Corn Prospects Are Good.

Lohrville.—Small grain in this county is coming out fine since the recent rains. The first planting of corn is up nicely. Many are replanting because the seed was poor. Probably from twenty-five to thirty per cent will have to be replanted. The outlook is that the hay crop will be short because of the drouth.

Dedicate Masonic Temple.

Storm Lake—The new Masonic temple in this city has been dedicated. The principal addresses were made by the Grand Master and the Grand Secretary of Iowa. In the evening, a banquet was served to over 400 guests. The Storm Lake Masons now have one of the largest and most richly fitted temples in Iowa.

Traveling Man's Wife Kills Self.

Mason City.—Mrs. W. F. Heath, aged 50, turned on the gas from the kitchen range, closed the doors and covered her head with a blanket. She was found dead later by friends. Mrs. Heath was the wife of a traveling man and continued ill health is believed to have caused her act.

Carroll Woman Fractures Hip.

Carroll—Mrs. J. H. Cheasebro, wife of Engineer Cheasebro, while performing her household duties, made a misstep and fractured her hip. She was taken to St. Anthony's hospital for treatment, and it is feared, on account of her advanced age, that she will be left a cripple.

Arrest Dubuque Man for Murder.

Dubuque.—Charles Veitzen, 60, died, and Frank Hutter, 35, is under arrest for murder. The men worked together in the lumber yads and two weeks ago became involved in a fight in which Veitzen was hurt about the head.

Dyer for Department Commander.

Des Moines.—Candidates for the elective offices in the Iowa Department of the Grand Army are beginning to appear. Five places are to be filled by the direct vote of the delegates. By a courtesy of the organization the office of senior vice commander goes to the city which entertains the encampment, so that this year Des Moines will get that position. Kinsman and Crocker posts of Des Moines, at a recent joint meeting, agreed on B. C. Ward as their candidate for the position of senior vice commander. He will have no opposition.

Indications are that there will be little if any contests for the five elective positions. H. A. Dwyer of Mason City is an active candidate for commander to succeed Commander M. McDonald. J. M. Briggs of Anita is a candidate for junior vice commander to succeed E. P. Messer of Sheldon, While B. C. Ward will be the Des Moines candidate for senior vice commander to succeed S. J. Robertson of Ft. Dodge. No candidates have appeared for medical director and chaplain.

The encampment opens June 8 and lasts four days, and indications are that it will be a brilliant success. Death is fast mustering out the boys in blue and this year will bring together for the last time many of the heroes who fought for the preservation of the union. Realizing this, the citizens of Des Moines are planning to make the encampment the acme of comfort and pleasure for the veterans.

Weekly Weather Crop Bulletin.

Des Moines, May ^^.—Much corn acreage in Iowa will need to be replanted according to Dr. George M. Chappel, section director, in the weekly crop bulletin. The bulletin takes on rather an optimistic tone and is as follows.

"Continued cool weather has prevailed during the last seven days, but the rainfall, for the state as a whole, has been much heavier than during any previous week of the season. The temperature was from 1 to 5 degrees below the normal and light frost was reported from several localities on the 18th. Copious rains fell in the central and northeastern districts where amounts from one to over three inches were reported. The rain has been very beneficial to grass, small grain, potatoes and garden truck and with warm weather would hasten the germination of corn. Practically all the corn acreage has been planted, but owing to poor seed and cold weather there will be much more replanting done than usual. The rains have also been beneficial to the berry crops and the indications are now favorable for one-fourth to one-half a crop of strawberries. Many apple, cherry, plum trees and grapevines are again putting forth new blossoms.

GEO. M. CHAPPEL,
" Section Director."

Davenport Gives New Car Franchise.

Davenport.—By a vote of 2,972 for and 1,794 against, the Tri-City Railway company and the Peoples Light company, known as the Merger company, which controls the street car and lighting systems of Davenport, Rock Island and Moline, were at a special election granted a twelve-year extension of their franchise, making twenty-five years from date, in return for their agreement to build an electric interurban line between Davenport and Muscatine and to give residents of Davenport 90 cent gas at the end of five years, a reduction of 2 cents each year to begin immediately and continue until the 90 cent mark is recahed. The present price is $1. The principal opponents of the measure were the labor unions, who demanded six street car tickets for a quarter as one of the concessions, but the company positively refused to accede to it.

Iowans Wedded Fifty Years.

Marshalltown.—Mr. and Mrs. William Bremner, old and prominent residents of this city, celebrated at LaGrange, Ill., at the home of their son, George H. Bremner, the fiftieth anniversary of their married life. Mr. and Mrs. Bremner came here shortly after their marriage in Iowa City, on March 24, 1860. For more than twenty-five years Mr. Bremner was county surveyor, and for almost as long a period city engineer. His wife is a daughter of the late George H. Hepburn, one of the early clerks of the supreme court of Iowa, and a brother of Col. W. P. Hepburn, for many years a member of the Iowa delegation at Washington from the Eighth congressional district.

Long Trip for Turtle's Eggs.

Iowa City.—Dr. Frank A. Stromsten of the laboratories of animal biology in the University of Iowa left for the Dry Tortugas, a group of islands in the West Indies, to secure the eggs of a giant sea turtle. The state board of education granted him a special leave of absence to head this expedition.

SYNOPSIS.

Thomas Ardmore and Henry Maine Griswold stumble upon intrigue when the governors of North and South Carolina are reported to have quarreled. Griswold allies himself with Barbara Osborne, daughter of the governor of South Carolina, while Ardmore espouses the cause of Jerry Dangerfield, daughter of the governor of North Carolina. These two young ladies are trying to fill the shoes of their fathers, while the latter are missing. Both states are in a turmoil over one Appleweight, an outlaw with great political influence. Unaware of each other's position, both Griswold and Ardmore set out to make the other prosecute Appleweight. Valuable papers in the Appleweight case are missing from the office of Gov. Osborne and Griswold places the theft at the door of the scheming attorney general. Ardmore charters a caboose and starts for the border to plan the arrest of Appleweight. Jerry meanwhile, is a guest at Ardsley. Ardmore's posse takes the field.

CHAPTER X.—Continued.

He was more buoyant than she had seen him, and she liked the note of affection that crept into his tone as he spoke of his friend.

"Ardmore is the most remarkable person alive," Griswold continued. "You remember—I spoke of him this morning. He likes to play the inscrutable idiot, and he carries it off pretty well; but underneath he's really clever. The most amazing ideas take hold of him. You never could imagine what he's doing now! I met him accidentally in Atlanta the other day, and he was in pursuit of a face—a girl's face that he had seen from a car window for only an instant on a siding somewhere. He declared to me most solemnly that the girl winked at him!"

Griswold was aware that Miss Osborne's interest in Ardmore cooled perceptibly.

"Oh!" she said, with that delightful intonation with which a woman utterly extinguishes a sister.

"I shouldn't have told you that," said Griswold, guiltily aware of falling temperature. "He is capable of following a winking eye at a perfectly respectful distance for a hundred years, and of being entertained all the time by the joy of pursuit."

"It seems very unusual," said Barbara, with cold finality.

Griswold remembered this talk as, the next day, aboard the train bound for Turner Court House, the seat of Mingo county, South Carolina, he pondered a telegram he had received from Ardmore. He read and re-read this message, chewing cigars and scowling at the landscape, and the cause of his perturbation of spirit may be roughly summarized in these words:

On leaving the executive mansion the night before, he had studied maps in his room at the Saluda house, and carefully planned his campaign. He had talked by telephone with the prosecuting attorney of Mingo county, and found that official politely responsive. So much had gone well. Then the juxtaposition of Ardmore's estate to the border, and the possible use of the house as headquarters, struck in upon him. He would, after all, generously take Ardmore into the game, and they would uphold the honor and dignity of the great commonwealth of South Carolina together. The keys of all Ardmore's houses were, so to speak, in Griswold's pocket, and invitations were unnecessary between them; yet, at Atlanta Ardmore had made a point of asking Griswold down to help while away the tedium of Mrs. Atchison's house party, and as a matter of form Griswold wired from Columbia, advising Ardmore of his unexpected descent.

Even in case Ardmore should still be abroad in pursuit of the winking eye, the doors of the huge house would be open to Griswold, who had entered there so often as the owner's familiar friend. These things he pondered deeply as he read and re-read Ardmore's reply to his message, a reply which was plainly enough dated at Ardsley, but which, he could not know, had really been written in caboose 0186 as it lay on a siding in the southeastern yards at Raleigh, and thence dispatched to the manager at Ardsley, with instructions to forward it as a new message to Griswold at Columbia. The chilling words thus flung at him were:

Prof. Henry Maine Griswold,
Saluda House, Columbia, S. C.:

I am very sorry, old man, but I can not take you in just now. Scarlet fever is epidemic among my tenants, and I could not think of exposing you to danger. As soon as the accursed plague passes I want to have you down.

An epidemic that closed the gates of Ardsley would assume the proportions of a national disaster; for even if the great house itself were quarantined, there were lodges and bungalows scattered over the domain, where a host of guests could be entertained in comfort. Griswold reflected that the very fact that he had wired from Columbia must have intimated to Ardmore that his friend was flying toward him, pursuant to the Atlanta invitation. Griswold dismissed a thousand speculations as unworthy. Ardmore had never shown the remotest trace of snobbishness, and as far as the threatened house party was concerned, Griswold knew Mrs. Atchison very well, and had been entertained at her New York house.

The patronizing tone of the thing caused Griswold to flush at every reading. If the Ardsley date line had not been so plainly written; if the phraseology were not so characteristic, there might be room for doubt; but Ardmore—Ardmore, of all men, had slapped him in the face!

But, scarlet fever or no scarlet fever, the pursuit of Appleweight had precedence of private grievances. By the time he reached Turner Court House Griswold had dismissed the ungraciousness of Ardmore, and his jaws were set with a determination to perform the mission intrusted to him by Barbara Osborne, and to wait until later for an accounting with his unaccountable friend.

Arrived at Turner's, Griswold strode at once toward the courthouse. The contemptuous rejection of his message by the sheriff of Mingo had angered Griswold, but he was destined to feel even more poignant insolence when, entering the sheriff's office, a deputy, languidly posed as a letter "V" in a swivel-chair, with his feet on the mantel, took a cob pipe from his mouth and lazily answered Griswold's importunate query with:

"The sheriff ain't hyeh, seh. He's a-visitin' his folks in Tennessy."

"When will he be back?" demanded Griswold, hot of heart, but maintaining the icy tone that had made him so formidable in cross-examination.

"I reckon I don't know, seh."

"Do you know your own name?" persisted Griswold sweetly.

"Go to hell, seh," replied the deputy. He reached for a match, relighted his pipe, and carefully crossed his feet on the mantel-shelf. The moment Griswold's steps died away in the outer corridor the deputy rose and busied himself so industriously with the telephone that within an hour all through the Mingo hills, and even beyond the state line, along lonely trails, across hills and through valleys, and beside cheery creeks and brooks, it was known that a strange man from Columbia was in Mingo county looking for the sheriff, and Appleweight, alias Poteet, and his men were everywhere on guard.

Griswold liked the prosecuting attorney on sight. His name was Habersham, and he was a youngster with a clear and steady gray eye. Instead of the southern statesman's flowing Prince Albert, he wore a sack-coat of gray jeans, and was otherwise distinguished by a shirt of white and blue check. He grinned as Griswold bent a puzzled look upon him.

"I took your courses at the university two years ago, professor, and I remember distinctly that you always wore a red cravat to your Wednesday's lectures."

"You have done well," replied Griswold, "for I never expected to find an old student who remembered half as much of me as that. Now, as I understood you over the telephone, Appleweight was indicted for stealing a ham in this county by the last grand jury, but the sheriff has failed or refused to make the arrest. How did the grand jury come to indict if this outlaw dominates all the hill country?"

"The grand jury wanted to make a showing of virtue, and it was, of course, understood between the foreman, the leader of the gang, and the sheriff that no warrant could be served on Appleweight. I did my duty; the grand jury's act was exemplary; and there the wheels of justice are blocked. The same thing is practically true across the state line in Dilwell county, North Carolina. These men, led by Appleweight, use their intimate knowledge of the country to elude pursuers when at times the revenue men undertake a raid, and the county authorities have never seriously molested them. Now and then one of these sheriffs will make a feint of going out to look for Appleweight, but you may be sure that due notice is given before he starts. Three revenue officers have lately been killed while looking for these men, and the government is likely to take vigorous action before long."

"We may as well be frank," said Griswold in his most professional voice. "I don't want the federal authorities to take these men; it is important that they should not do so. This is an affair between the governors of the two Carolinas. It has been said that neither of them dares press the matter of arrest, but I am here in Gov. Osborne's behalf to give the lie to that imputation. Gov. Osborne has been viciously maligned. Suppose all these people were arrested in Mingo county under these indictments, what would be the result—trial and acquittal?"

"Just that, in spite of any effort made to convict them."

"Well, Gov. Osborne is tired of this business and wants the Appleweight scandal disposed of once and for all."

"That's strange," remarked Habersham, clearly surprised at Griswold's vigorous tone. "I called on the governor in his office at Columbia only ten days ago, and he put me off. He said he had to prepare an address to deliver before the South Carolina Political Reform Association, and he couldn't take up the Appleweight case; and I called on Bosworth, the attorney general, and he grew furiously angry, and said I was guilty of the gravest malfeasance in not having brought those men to book long ago. When I suggested that he connive with the governor toward removing our sheriff, he declared that the governor was a coward. He seemed anxious to put the governor in a hole, though why he should take that attitude I can't make out, as it has been generally understood that Gov. Osborne's personal friendliness for him secured his nomination and election to the attorney generalship, and I have heard that he is engaged to the governor's oldest daughter."

"He's a contemptible hound," replied Griswold with feeling, "and at the proper time we shall deal with him; but it is of more importance just now to make Appleweight a prisoner in North Carolina. If he's arrested over there, that lets us out; and if the North Carolina authorities won't arrest their own criminals we'll go over in Dilwell county and show them how to be good. The man's got to be locked up, and he'd look much better in a North Carolina jail, under all the circumstances."

"That's good in theory, but how do you justify it in law?"

"Oh, that's the merest matter of formuiae! My dear Habersham, all the usual processes of law go down before emergencies!"

The airiness of Griswold's tone caused the prosecutor to laugh, for this was not the sober associate professor of admiralty whose lectures he had sat under at the University of Virginia, but a different person, whose new attitude toward the law and its enforcement shocked him immeasurably.

"Well, as I told you over the telephone, we hear a great deal about Appleweight and his crowd, but we never hear much of their enemies, who are, nevertheless, of the same general stock, and equally determined when aroused. Ten of these men I have quietly called to meet at my farm out here a few miles from town, on Thursday night. They come from different points over the country, and we'll have a small but grim posse that will be ready for business. You may not know it, but the Appleweights are most religious. Appleweight himself boasts that he never misses church on Sunday. He goes also to the midweek service on Thursday night, so I have learned, and thereby hangs our opportunity. Mount Nebo church lies off here toward the north. It's a lonely point in itself, though it's the spiritual center and rendezvous for a wide area. If Appleweight can be taken at all, that's the place, and I'm willing to make the trial. Whether to stampede the church and make a fight, or seize him alone as he approaches the place, is a question for discussion with the boys I have engaged to go into the game. How does it strike you?"

"First rate. Ten good men ought to be enough; but if it comes down to numbers, the state militia can be brought into use. The South Carolina National Guard is in camp, and we can have a regiment quick enough, if I ask it."

Habersham whistled.

A Strange "God Tree."

What is a god tree? Nobody knows or had ever heard of such a thing until, not long ago, an ethnological explorer came across quite a lot of them on certain little known islands along the west coast of Sumatra.

The god tree is carved out of wood, with curiously fashioned branches of the same material. On these branches are hung strings of bright colored bits of cloth and tiny baskets filled with grains of rice. The whole affair is not more than three feet high.

According to the belief of the natives of the islands aforesaid, a god lives in the tree. He is not a particularly good sort of divinity and, if he takes a notion to leave the tree he is liable to do folks a mischief. The best way to persuade him to stay at home in the tree is to make the latter attractive by adorning it in the manner described and by supplying rice in baskets for the god to eat.

The god is a household god and the tree which he inhabits is kept in a corner of the family dwelling.

Life's Greatest Problem.

The desire to uplift the sisterhood has many drawbacks and discouragements. Mrs. Lysander Appleton recently conducted such a meeting. She spoke of the blind groping of her sisters for higher ideals, and the troub'ed questions that obtruded themselves upon their sub-consciousness all through the day and night. "I would like to hear from you," she said. "Perhaps in your yearning for a solution of the problems that confront you I may be able to help you. Mrs. Boogs, tell us what is the great question of your life." Mrs. Boogs rose pale and trembling: "It is this," she said: "What shall I get for the next meal?"—Atchison Globe.

Woman as Bank Officer.

Both the paying and the receiving tellers in the Maiden Lane Savings bank of New York are young women. In a circular recently issued the officials of the bank commended these two women for their efficiency, accuracy and the general excellence of their work. Since they have been in office no shortage of cash has been found and they readily detect discrepancies in signatures and are unvaryingly punctual and courteous to patrons of the bank.

"Show Me Another."

Soon after twins had arrived at the home of a prominent dry goods merchant recently the proud father led his son Richard, aged four, into the room to see the little strangers. The father first pulled down the covers and showed one of the babies to his son. He then walked to the other side of the bed and exhibited the other twin. Richard gazed at the two for a moment with a noncommittal look on his face, and then demanded:

"Show me another, papa."

J. L. Lloyd for County Superintendent

This is what an ex-County Superintendent has to say for him:

J. L. Lloyd, candidate for county superintendent of schools is a Hancock county boy, being reared on a farm in Boone township some six miles north of Corwith. He is a practical young man, having completed the country school course, then the town high school course and then the Normal College course. If we must lose a good official it is gratifying to know that we may elect another first class man to this most important position. Prof. Baggs is well fitted to fill this position, and he is in every way worthy of your support and influence. We say this in all honesty, after an acquaintance with the above named gentleman for some six or seven years.

Grandma Schwichtenberg is still very low.

Mrs. John Gruetzmacher is visiting in Garner.

Mrs Chas. Gruetzmacher was here from Charles City one day last week.

Rev. Hubber and Ed and Lee Ell went to Clear Lake yesterday on a fishing trip.

The Wellemeyer Department Store has a talk on Clothing in this week's ad, which you should read.

Mrs. Schneider and daughter, of Monona, arrived here last evening for a visit at the George Gruetzmacher home.

Miss Elinora Koerner, who has been teaching the intermediate room in our schools the past year, left for her home at Charles City, Friday evening.

Dan Webner had a couple of ribs broken in a friendly scuffle one day last week. He is getting along nicely however and will soon be up and around again.

We are a little short on locals and long on political matter this week. But you know it only comes once in two years and it will be all over but the shouting next Tuesday night

Fred Bock left Friday for Plymouth, Wisconsin, to attend the graduating exercises of the Mission House College, where his son Albert is one of the graduates this year.

Governor B. F. Carroll will speak at Britt, Iowa, on Friday evening, June 3, on the political issues before the Republican primaries. All are invited. Come out and hear a good speech. 1

Rev. Achtermann and wife and two children, Fred Bock, and John Bock and wife and two children left last week for Plymouth, Wis., to attend the graduating exercises of Mission House College.

O. F. Missman was here from Garner Tuesday. Ferd is making friends and votes every day in his canvass and he is the popular candidate in this neck-o'-the woods for county attorney.

There was a good sized crowd in Klemme last Monday for the ball game and dance. Ventura beat Klemme in the ball game by a score of 12 to 4. The dance in the evening was largely attended.

Sunday stock shipments—W. R. Bloom a car of cattle and one of hogs, Jos. Johnson a car of cattle, Aug. Barz a car of cattle, H. C. Lau a car of hogs. Messrs. Bloom, Johnson and Barz went in with the shipment.

W. E. Raw was in Klemme this morning. He is meeting with much encouragement in his campaign for the office of sheriff. He has the reputation of being a clean, moral young man and his friends are standing loyally by him.

Every republican voter in Northern Iowa should cast a ballot at the primary election next Tuesday marked for Prof. A. M. Deyoe, of Hancock county, for State Superintendent of Public Instruction. The writer has known Prof. Deyoe for a number of years and we know for a positive fact that he is fully and abundantly well qualified for the position to which he aspires. No man in the state is more interested in the schools; no man has worked harder for the schools than has Mr. Deyoe, and if elected he will be an honor to the state and to the voters who elect him. Don't fail to vote for A. M. Deyoe for State Superintendent.

The Kanawha Record is turning democratic or else its editor has seen a bug-bear.

Our line of Furniture is complete and the prices to suit the times. G. F. Schuler, Garner.

For county clerk we have two candidates who were born in the county—J. W. Knadler and L. E. Bowker—and the race should be an interesting one. Both are rattling good men and we predict that it will be a close contest.

A new lot of wall paper just received. Prices from 5c to 75c a double roll, at G. F. Schuler's.

L. E. Bowker is putting in some strong licks this week in the interest of his candidacy for Clerk of Court. He has been handicapped somewhat as his school work in Klemme demanded his time until this week so he will be unable to see all the voters. Mr. Bowker is well qualified for the office which he seeks and if elected he will perform his duties in first class shape, we are sure. He has the advantage of a wide acquaintance, having been born in the county.

P. L. Brown, of Garner, the popular republican candidate for the office of Recorder of Hancock County, was here yesterday in the interests of his candidacy. Pete is a jolly good fellow and has lots of friends here who are strong in his support. He has before demonstrated that he has the qualifications necessary to conduct this office to the entire satisfaction of everybody in the county and if nominated and elected, the affairs of the county in the recorder's office will be attended to in first class shape. Another thing that can truthfully be said in Pete's favor is, that he is and always has been a true blue republican and republicans always find him fighting for the party first, last and all the time—and they always will find him the same whether he wins or loses. He most respectfully asks for his candidacy the careful and honest consideration of the republican voters when they cast their ballots at the primary election next Tuesday. Pete has a host of friends who hope to see him land a winner in the race.

To My Friends and Neighbors in the 10th Congressional District

I take this method of reminding you of my candidacy for Attorney General. I am the only candidate for that office in the 10th and 11th Districts and hope for a substantial endorsement here. The state of Iowa is large and the time for canvass short. I know that you will appreciate that it has been impossible for me to see each of you personally. I shall therefore the more deeply appreciate your generous support. With your active efforts in bringing out the full Republican vote on primary day, June 7th, I confidently expect to win.

AFTER SUFFERING ONE YEAR

Cured by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound

Milwaukee, Wis. — "Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound has made me a well woman, and I would like to tell the whole world of it. I suffered from female trouble and fearful pains in my back. I had the best doctors and they all decided that I had a tumor in addition to my female trouble, and advised an operation. Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound made me a well woman and I have no more backache. I hope I can help others by telling them what Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound has done for me." — MRS. EMMA IMSE, 833 First St., Milwaukee, Wis.

The above is only one of the thousands of grateful letters which are constantly being received by the Pinkham Medicine Company of Lynn, Mass., which prove beyond a doubt that Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, made from roots and herbs, actually does cure these obstinate diseases of women after all other means have failed, and that every such suffering woman owes it to herself to at least give Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound a trial before submitting to an operation, or giving up hope of recovery.

Mrs. Pinkham, of Lynn, Mass., invites all sick women to write her for advice. She has guided thousands to health and her advice is free.

SURELY NO PLACE FOR HER

In the Presence of Such Magic There Seemed But One Thing for Maid to Do.

Prof. Percival Lowell, the eminent Martian astronomer, said in a recent interview in New York:

"The Martian canals are not Panama canals. The word 'canals,' you know, really means 'lines.' It shouldn't be taken literally, as the servant girl in Boston took the parlor magic.

"An amateur magician in a Beacon street house was going through his tricks while a maid passed in and out with refreshments.

"The magician was reading letters placed under a rug as the maid brought in a tray of lemon ices.

"'What is this?' a spectator asked.

"'That is B,' the magician answered; and, sure enough, his answer was correct.

"The maid looked with astonishment at the letter which had been hidden under the thick rug. She turned her gaze on the handsome young magician who had read it. Then, setting down her tray of ices, she hid her rosy face in her hands and ran out of the room.

"'What's the good o' me clothes?' she cried."

HARD ON CHILDREN.
When Teacher Has Coffee Habit.

"Best is best, and best will ever live." When a person feels this way about Postum they are glad to give testimony for the benefit of others.

A school teacher down in Miss. says: "I had been a coffee drinker since my childhood, and the last few years it had injured me seriously.

"One cup of coffee taken at breakfast would cause me to become so nervous that I could scarcely go through with the day's duties, and this nervousness was often accompanied by deep depression of spirits and heart palpitation.

"I am a teacher by profession, and when under the influence of coffee had to struggle against crossness when in the school room.

"When talking this over with my physician, he suggested that I try Postum, so I purchased a package and made it carefully according to directions; found it excellent of flavor, and nourishing.

"In a short time I noticed very gratifying effects. My nervousness disappeared, I was not irritated by my pupils, life seemed full of sunshine, and my heart troubled me no longer.

"I attribute my change in health and spirits to Postum alone."

Read the little book, "The Road to Wellville," in pkgs. "There's a Reason."

Ever read the above letter? A new one appears from time to time. They are genuine, true, and full of human interest.

G.A.R. ENCAMPMENT

To Be Held in Des Moines on June 8, 9 and 10

WILL BE LARGELY ATTENDED

Note of Pathos Underlies the Statements in General Orders Issued by Department Commander McDonald.

Des Moines, May 28.—There is a note of pathos, a singular reading of the future, in the general orders of Commander McDonald respecting the encampment of the Iowa Grand Army in Des Moines, June 8, 9 and 10. He opens his order with this statement: "It is expected that this encampment will be more largely attended than any further encampment during the remaining years of the veterans."

On the advantages of Des Moines as the place for holding the encampment, the general orders say: "The city is central and there are many inducements for visiting it at this time. The Army Post is an attraction that many will desire to visit and it will afford to many, perhaps for the last time, the opportunity of seeing the colors they followed so faithfully and patriotically during the great war."

The following specific orders are made.

The commander of Crocker Post No. 12 will detail an officer of the day and the commander of Kinsman Post No. 7 an officer for the entrance to the Auditorium.

Comrades W. A. Burnap, Post No. 101, and J. H. Koons, Post No. 7, are hereby appointed as finance committee. They will audit the books of the assistant adjutant and quartermaster general at their convenience and be ready to report to the council of administration at 3 o'clock on Wednesday afternoon.

The following comrades will act as the committee on credentials: Asst. Adjt.-Gen. Geo. A. Newman, Thomas Graham Post No. 168; J. C. Blodgett, Post No. 88; J. W. Krapfel, Post No. 68; William Blades, Post No. 78, and J. P. Risley, Post No. 1. They will report to the assistant adjutant general on arrival.

Byers Gives Primary Ruling.

Attorney General Byers has ruled that names written in the primary ballot of either party at the election June 7 should be counted and that if the person whose name is so written on the ballot for any state, congressional or county office receives 35 per cent of the total vote cast by that party, such a person will be the party nominee for the office for which his name was written in. Under this ruling if two friends of John Doe write the name on the republican ballot election day for county auditor and no other candidate appears for that place the choice of those two men makes John Doe the republican candidate for county auditor. The same rule applies to any state, congressional or county office.

Dr. Sumner Addressed Osteopaths.

Discouraging the use of hypodermic injections of morphine, cocaine and similar drug stimulants in cases of illness, Dr. G. H. Sumner, secretary of the state board of health, told the osteopathic physicians that physicians should stay as far away from the hypodermic syringe as possible. He spoke before the twelfth annual convention of the Iowa State Osteopathic association convention.

Parrish Heads Osteopaths.

Dr. U. S. Parrish, of Storm Lake, was the successful candidate for the presidency of the Iowa Osteopathic association in the annual election held at Still college. Other officers elected were as follows. Dr. Della B. Caldwell, Des Moines, vice president; Dr. Emily Fike. Des Moines, second vice president; Dr. L. O. Thompson, Red Oak, treasurer and Dr. T. B. Larrabee, Clarinda, secretary.

Druggists Will Come Here.

Des Moines has been chosen as the meeting place for the 1910 convention of the State Druggists association. The executive committee of the association met in the offices of United States Marshal Frank B. Clark and set the dates of the convention as July 6, 7, and 8.

Fire Levels Car Barns.

Property valued at $150,000, including twenty-three electric cars, two horses, repair wagons, supplies and tools was destroyed, and two men, J. Friner and F. L. Hayhorst, injured by fire, believed to have originated from imperfect insulation, which gutted the car barn of the Des Moines City railway at Second and Locust streets.

Nurse Given Diploma—Weds.

Miss Mary Lucile Fisher graduated from the Nurses' Training school at the Methodist hospital and immediately afterward slipped away and married Warren S. Wright of Mount Ayr, astonishing her classmates and friends. The wedding was held at the residence of Dr. E. T. Hagerman. Only a few friends of the young couple were present as witnesses. Mr. and Mrs. Wright will make their home in Mount Ayr. Miss Fisher is a graduate of East Des Moines Hign school and is well known in the city.

The members of the class of 1911 are as follows: Susan Hart Clay, Minnie Florence Jones, Ora Belle Gnagey, Mary Lucile Fisher, Hazel Grace Anderson, Sarah Markey-Smith, Anna Christine Peterson Lygum, Nora A. Collins, Loudeam Boatwright, Lydia Irene McDonald, Gertrude Vivian Myers, Jennie Elizabeth Andrews, Annie F. Crowston Knipe, Vivian R. Briggs, Alvira B. Stengel.

The charges were filed in the court of Justice of the Peace Conroy. Mattie says that this husband left her on May 2 and has refused to provide for her and that she is now in a destitute condition.

The annual instruction camp of the Iowa guard has been called for June 27, 28, 29 and 30.

Preparing Panorama for State Fair.

The "Massacre of Spirit Lake" is to be the title of the night show panorama to be given at the State Fair this fall. The Overland
The King of Cars

No other car has so large a sale—none h made such amazing records. Price, $1,000 u

It requires four factories, employing 4,000 men—turning out 140 Overlands daily—to meet the flood-like demand for these cars. Yet two years ago a hundred rivals had a larger sale.

The reason lies largely in the car's utter simplicity. Its able designer made it almost trouble-proof.

He created an engine which, for endurance, is the marvel of engineering.

He designed the pedal control. One goes forward or backward, slow or fast, by merely pushing pedals. The hands have nothing to do but steer.

A child can master the car in ten minutes. A novice can drive it a thousand miles without any thought of trouble.

The Overland always keeps going, and almost cares for itself. All the usual complexities have been eliminated.

That is why each car sells others, and our orders for this year's Overlands amount to $24,000,000.

Another fact is that no other gives nearly so much for the mo This is due to our enormous out and the fortunes invested in our tomatic machinery. It would b rupt a smaller maker to try to c pete with us.

You can get a 25-horsepower O land, with a 102-inch wheel base, $1,000. You can get a 40-horsepo Overland, with a 112-inch wheel b for $1,250. The prices include la and magneto.

LOVE SINKS TO THE STOMACH

Danish Wife Learns Pinochle and Is a Good Entertainer—Her Duty, She Thinks.

"After marriage love sinks to the stomach. There is no doubt of it, my friend. The old adage is right." Here is a suffragist, a good suffragist, from Denmark, who has seen life and who knows.

"Three husbands have I had," says she, according to the New York Evening Sun, "and of what I speak I am certain. My first was an Englishman—a race reputed difficult; my second was a Dutchman out of Holland, a good man, though Dutch; my third is a German, an 'echt scher.' Yet from all these three have I received never anything but respect. Each has been an excellent husband; and for why? I have known my business as a wife. That is it in a fistful, yes. After marriage love sinks to the stomach."

Mme. Volkman, the president of the Independent Woman's Suffrage club in Harlem, speaks with the conviction and authority of experience.

"Let us come back to that duty of a wife. Evening comes. The good wife prepares for her husband an excellent repast, adorns herself within keeping of his means and from six to ten o'clock of an evening is she her husband's company.

"Pinochle she must learn, also dominoes. If she has no taste for these things that does not signify. It is her duty. A man will stay in his home quite content evening after evening so that he can put between his teeth a good pipe and sit down at ease to pinochle.

"I know what I say. Three husbands have I had and with each one it was the same. Now once a week there comes to my home a small club of my husband's. Three friends, a little beer and pinochle that makes for him his pleasure. That is my husband's one outside diversion. Ten cents or so changes hands for a pastime and for one evening I am relieved.

"Perhaps you ask: Is it not hard for an active woman of brains night after night to sit opposite her man and to play at pinochle. That is neither here nor there, my friend. Some sacrifice is necessary to all success. Only from a contented man will a wife get all what for she asks. Only from many contented men will many wives receive that woman's suffrage."

Accidents in Cotton Mills.

Cotton spinning mills in England, France, Belgium, Germany and the United States have, for a century at least been prolific sources of accidents arising directly from the machinery in use, as distinct from other causes. It was this prevalence of injury among cotton mill workers on the continent that called into being the Society for the Prevention of Accidents in Factories in Alsace 20 years ago, and excellent work has been carried on by this society and its ramifications a. ong the cotton mills of Alsace Lorraine and Rhenish Prussia. It must, in fact, be credited to that disinterested body of mechanicians that they were the main pioneers of efficient safety devices for cotton machinery. During the last decade mills in England have adopted several of these appliances, improved on others, and from the inspiration given by those early efforts British engineers and machinists have invented many more which do good service every working day in the mill. The United States are now actively falling into line, and insurance companies are giving serious attention to the proper safeguarding of machinery in mills under their supervision.—H. M. Crawford in Cassier's Magazine.

Bigamist in Luck.

A seaman is in custody at Hull, England, charged with marrying five wives. The magistrate said he might console himself with the thought that he is safer locked up than at liberty in the circumstances.

A Legend of Embroidery.

Konan-tin, called "the Goddess of Mercy," who was a missionary to Japan from China, having left her native land to teach Buddhism to the Japanese, is said, according to tradition, to have been the earliest instructor in the art of embroidery known to the Japanese.

The young woman, who was a nun of high standing, was obliged to take refuge in a temple for a time, and there she and other women missionaries who had gone to Japan in the interest of Buddhism wrought out in their embroideries their religious dreams of a future world.

From this example the Japanese learned the rudiments of the art which they so wonderfully developed.

Other traditions have it that the nun did not teach the art of embroidery, but that she inspired those who were already acquainted with it to strive for more serious expression of their religious feeling through this art.

This beautiful gem appeared the other day as a headline in the Chicago Tribune: "Make City Heads Toe Mark." What a somersault this must have been.—The Standard.

WOMEN'S ILLS.

Many women who suffer with backache, bearing-down pain, headaches and nervousness do not know that these ailments are usually due to trouble with the kidneys. Doan's Kidney Pills remove the cause.

Mrs. Joseph Cross, Church St., Morrilton, Ark., says: "For weeks I was bent double by pain in my back and the kidney secretions were profuse. My feet and ankles were badly swollen and I had headaches and dizzy spells. Six doctors treated me without relief and I finally began taking Doan's Kidney Pills. They cured me."

Remember the name—Doan's.

BABY'S SCALP CRUSTED

"Our little daughter, when three months old, began to break out on the head and we had the best doctors to treat her, but they did not do her any good. They said she had eczema. Her scalp was a solid scale all over. The burning and itching was so severe that she could not rest, day or night. We had about given up all hopes when we read of the Cuticura Remedies. We at once got a cake of Cuticura Soap, a box of Cuticura Ointment and one bottle of Cuticura Resolvent, and followed directions carefully. After the first dose of the Cuticura Resolvent, we used the Cuticura Soap freely and applied the Cuticura Ointment. Then she began to improve rapidly and in two weeks the scale came off her head and new hair began to grow. In a very short time she was well. She is now sixteen years of age and a picture of health. We used the Cuticura Remedies about five weeks, regularly, and then we could not tell she had been affected by the disease. We used no other treatments after we found out what the Cuticura Remedies would do for her. J. Fish and Ella M. Fish, Mt. Vernon, Ky., Oct. 12, 1909."

His Daughter—Daddy, you were twenty-five when this was taken, weren't you? Why, you might have sat for it yesterday.

Her Father—M'yes; your mother's own daughter. Well, well, you'll find it on the table, I think.

His Daughter—Find what, daddy, darling?

Her Father—The checkbook, my own lamb.

A Sample Box of Resinol Ointment Was Nearly Sufficient in This Case.

Enclosed find money to pay for Resinol. Just the sample you sent has almost cured Eczema on my little girl's face. I will gladly tell my friends of the great merits of Resinol.

VERBAL MISHAPS.

Dickens Once Made Two Bad Breaks the Same Evening.

Charles Dickens once wrote to a friend: "I have distinguished myself in two respects lately. I took a young lady, unknown, down to dinner and talked to her about the bishop of Durham's nepotism in the matter of Mr Cheese. I found she was Mrs. Cheese Later I expatiated to the member for Marylebone, thinking him to be an Irish member, on the contemptible character of the Marylebone constituency and the Marylebone representative."

Two such mishaps in one evening were enough to reduce the most brilliant talker to the condition of the three inside passengers of a London bound coach who beguiled the tedium of the journey from Southampton by discussing the demerits of William Cobbett until one of the party went so far as to assert that the object of their denunciation was a domestic tyrant, given to beating his wife.

Much to his dismay the solitary woman passenger, who had hitherto sat a silent listener, remarked:

"Pardon me, sir. A kinder husband and father never breathed. And I ought to know, for I am William Cobbett's wife."

Mr. Giles of Virginia and Judge Duval of Maryland, members of congress during Washington's administration, boarded at the house of a Mrs. Gibbon, whose daughters were well on in years and remarkable for talkativeness.

When Jefferson became president Duval was comptroller of the treasury and Giles a senator. Meeting one day in Washington, they fell to chatting over old times, and the senator asked the comptroller if he knew what had become of "that cackling old maid, Jenny Gibbon."

"She is Mrs. Duval, sir," was the unexpected reply.

Giles did not attempt to mend matters, as a certain Mr. Tuberville unwisely did. Happening to observe to a fellow guest that the lady who had sat at his right hand at dinner was the ugliest woman he had ever beheld, the person addressed expressed his regret that he should think his wife so ill looking.

"I have made a mistake," said the horrified Tuberville. "I meant the lady who sat on my left."

"Well, sir, she is my sister."

This brought the frank avowal, "It can't be helped, sir, then, for if what you say be true I confess I never saw such an ugly family in the course of my life."—Youth's Companion.

What He Wished to Know.

"Here's an article in this magazine entitled 'How to Meet Trouble,'" said Mrs. Wedderly. "Shall I read it to you?"

"No, thank you," replied his wife's husband. "How to dodge trouble is the brand of information I'm looking for."—Chicago News.

An Ideal Sunday Newspaper

Recent issues of the Sunday Record-Herald remind one that Chicago may fairly lay claim to producing the best newspapers in the world, not excepting those of New York. The Sunday Record-Herald, in foreign news alone, has its own special cable service in addition to those of the New York Herald, World, Journal of Commerce and Associated Press. This is a fair example of the completeness of the paper in every department.

Aside from the regular news features, there is something in the Sunday Record-Herald for every member of the family. The special articles by William E. Curtis and Walter Wellman are always interesting. The sporting section offers four whole pages of fresh and authentic news in every line of sport. The woman's section is filled with illustrated articles on the latest wrinkles in fashion and domestic science, with Marion Harland and Mme. Qui Vive as regular contributors, and Dame Curtsey's "Novelties in Entertainment" as a valued feature. The dramatic page, written by James O'Donnell Bennett, is admittedly without an equal in the West. The array of splendid special articles by skilled writers, finely illustrated, also is typical of the high literary quality of the Record-Herald. In the way of humor there is the comic colored supplement for children besides Richard H. Little's laughable articles for adults and S. E. Kiser's delightful "Alternating Currents" for everybody.

But the thing that lifts the Sunday Record Herald most emphatically above all its rivals is its magazine section. There is nothing else that can touch this in American journalism. The Sunday Magazine of the Record Herald is a real magazine full of stories and articles by the most famous writers of our day, illustrated by celebrated artists. In quality and beauty it compares favorably with the best monthlies. No wonder the Record-Herald is regarded as the ideal Sunday newspaper!

For sheriff on the democratic ticket, Wm. Lau was nominated over D. J. Sloan, but we are unable to get the figures.

Chas. W. Stiehl had a walkaway and is the democratic nominee for county recorder.

That man Suurballe is sure some runner for a heavy set man.

Missman for county attorney ran like a racehorse on the east side and on the west side too, for that matter.

We will try to give the complete vote on county offices next week but it is impossible to get the exact figures for this issue.

The state ticket is in doubt at this time but Carroll has probably been renominated for governor.

Prof. Baggs will have a majority of about 100 for county superintendent.

Persian Prayer Rugs.

About 200 years ago small embroidered rugs were largely made in Persia, chiefly at Ispahan. These were prayer rugs, and on each of them near one end was a small embroidered mark to show where the bit of sacred earth from Mecca was to be placed. In obedience to a law of the Koran, that the head must be bowed to the ground in prayer, this was touched by the forehead when the prostration was made, and so the letter of the law was carried out. The custom still prevails. The Persian women who weave the finest prayer rugs seldom weave any other kind of rug.

Charitable.

It is said of the author of a volume of biography that his verdict on the great of his chosen period is much that of the New Hampshire parson at the highly approved funeral of a parishioner: "Brethren, we must agree that our deceased friend was mean in some things, but let us in Christian charity allow that he was meaner in others."

SYNOPSIS.

Thomas Ardmore and Henry Maine Griswold stumble upon intrigue when the governors of North and South Carolina are reported to have quarreled. Griswold allies himself with Barbara Osborne, daughter of the governor of South Carolina, while Ardmore espouses the cause of Jerry Dangerfield, daughter of the governor of North Carolina. These two young ladies are trying to fill the shoes of their fathers, while the latter are missing. Both states are in a turmoil over one Appleweight, an outlaw with great political influence. Unaware of each other's position, both Griswold and Ardmore set out to make the other prosecute Appleweight. Valuable papers in the Appleweight case are missing from the office of Gov. Osborne and Griswold places the theft at the door of the scheming attorney general. Ardmore charters a caboose and starts for the border to plan the arrest of Appleweight. Jerry meanwhile, is a guest at Ardsley. Ardmore's posse takes the field. Griswold, plotting to the same end as Ardmore, is also scouting the border with a posse.

CHAPTER XI.

Two Ladies on a Balcony.

The outer aspect of Ardsley is, frankly, feudal. The idea of a North Carolina estate had grown out of Ardmore's love of privacy and his wish to get away from New York where his family was all too frequently struck by the spot light. The great tract of land once secured he had not concerned himself about a house, but had thrown together a comfortable bungalow which satisfied him for a year. But Ardmore's gentle heart, inaccessible to demands of many sorts, was a defenseless citadel when appeals were made to his generosity. A poor young architect, lately home from the Ecole des Beaux Arts, with many honors but few friends, fell under Ardmore's eyes. The towers and battlements that soon thereafter crowned the terraced slopes at Ardsley, etching a noble line against the lovely panorama of North Carolina hills, testified at once to the architect's talent for adaptation and Ardmore's diminished balances at the Bronx Loan and Trust Company.

On a balcony that commanded the sunset—a balcony bright with geraniums that hung daringly over a ravine on the west, Mrs. Atchison and Miss Jerry Dangerfield were cozily taking their tea. Their white gowns, the snowy awning stirring slightly in the hill air, the bright trifles of the tea-table mingled in a picture of charm and contentment.

"I wonder," said Mrs. Atchison abruptly, "where Tommy is."

"I have no definite idea," said Jerry, pouring cream, "but let us hope that he is earning his salary."

"His salary?" and Mrs. Atchison's brows contracted. "Do you mean that my brother is taking pay for this mysterious work he is doing?"

"He shall be paid in money," replied Jerry with decision. "As I have only the barest acquaintance with Mr. Ardmore, never, in fact, having seen him until a few days ago, it would be very improper for me to permit him to serve me except under the rules that govern the relations of employer and employe."

Mrs. Atchison smiled with the wise tolerance of a woman of the world; and she was a lady, it must be said, who had a keen perception of that sane and ample philosophy of life which proceeds, we may say, for the sake of convenience, from the sense of humor. She did not like to be puzzled; and she had never in her life been surprised, least of all by any word or deed of her singular brother Tommy. She liked and even cultivated with daring the inadvertent turns in a day's affairs. The cool fashion in which her brother had placed the daughter of the governor of North Carolina in her hands on board her car at Raleigh had amused her. She had learned nothing from Jerry of the beginnings of that young woman's acquaintance with the master of Ardsley—an acquaintance which seemed to be intimate in certain aspects but amazingly distant and opaque in others. Miss Geraldine Dangerfield, like Mrs. Atchison herself, was difficult to surprise, and Tommy Ardmore's sister admired this in any one and she particularly admired it in Jerry, who was so charming in so many other ways.

"I hope," said Mrs. Atchison, putting down her cup and gazing dreamily into the west, "that you have not given Tommy any commission in which he is likely to fail."

This was, as the lady knew, almost vulgarly leading; but Jerry folded her arms, and spoke out with charming frankness.

"I have heard my father say," said Jerry, "that incapable men often rise to great opportunities when they are pushed. Mr. Ardmore has undertaken to perform for me a service of the greatest delicacy and not unattended with danger. You have been kind to me, Mrs. Atchison, and as you are my chaperon and entitled to my fullest confidence it is right for you to know just how I came here, and why your brother is absent in my service."

For once curiosity bound Mrs. Atchison in chains of steel.

"Tell me nothing, dear, unless you are quite free to do so," she murmured; but her heart skipped a beat as she waited.

"I should not think of doing so except of my own free will," declared Jerry, carelessly following the flight of a hawk that flapped close by toward the neighboring woods. "It may interest you to know that just now your brother, Mr. Thomas Ardmore, is the governor of North Carolina. He does not exactly know it, for at Raleigh I myself was governor of North Carolina at the time we met and I only made Mr. Ardmore my private secretary; but when it became necessary to take the field I placed him in full charge, and he is now not only governor of the Old North State, but also the commander-in-chief of her troops in the field."

Mrs. Atchison moved forward slightly, but evinced no other sign of surprise. The hour, the scene, the girl were all to her liking. She would even prolong the delight of hearing the further history of her brother's amazing elevation to supreme power in an American commonwealth—it was so foreign to all experience, so heavy with possibilities, so delicious in that it had happened to Tommy of all men in the world!

"I trust," she said, smiling a little, "that Tommy will not prove unworthy of the confidence you have reposed in him."

"If he does," said Jerry, slapping her hands together to free them of an imaginary sugar crumb, "I shall never, never marry him."

"I love you more and more! You may tell me anything you like without fear of being misunderstood; but tell me nothing that you prefer to keep to yourself."

"If you were not Mr. Ardmore's sister I should not tell you this; and I shall never tell another soul. I was coming home from a visit in Baltimore and the train stopped somewhere to let another train pass. The two trains stood side by side for a little while and in the window of the sleeper opposite me I saw a young man who seemed very sad. So, just as my train started, at the very last moment that we looked at each other, I winked at that gentleman with, I think, my right eye."

Miss Geraldine Dangerfield touched the offending member delicately with her handkerchief.

Mrs. Atchison bent forward and took both the girl's hands.

"And that was Tommy—my brother Tommy?"

"That gentleman has proved to be Mr. Thomas Ardmore. I had not the slightest idea that I should ever in the world see him again. My only hope was that he would go on his way cheered and refreshed by my sign of good-will, though he was either so depressed or so surprised that he made no response. I never expected to see him again in this world; and when I had almost forgotten all about him he coolly sent in his card to me at the executive mansion in Raleigh. And I was very harsh with him when I learned who he was; for you know the Ardmore estate owns a lot of North Carolina bonds that are due on the first of June, and Mr. Billings had been chasing papa all over the country to know whether they will be paid; and I supposed of course your brother was looking for papa, too, to annoy him about some mere detail of that bond business, for the state treasurer, who does not love papa, has gone away fishing and Mr. Billings is perfectly wild."

"Delicious!" exclaimed Mrs. Atchison. "Perfectly delicious! May I call you Jerry? Thank you, dear. Let me tell you that I am 32 and you are—?"

"Seventeen," supplied Jerry.

"And this is the most amusing, interesting and exciting thing I have heard in all my life. It might be difficult ordinarily for me to forgive the wink, but your explanation lifts it out of the realm of social impropriety into the sphere of generous benevolence."

"Your brother does not seem particularly proud of his family connection," said Jerry. "He spoke of you in the most beautiful way, but he seems distressed by the actions of some of the others."

Mrs. Atchison sighed.

"Tommy is right about us. We are a sad lot."

"But he is very hard on the duke. Since I came to Ardsley his grace has treated me with the greatest courtesy, and he has spoken to me in the most complimentary terms. He is beyond question a man of kind heart, for he has promised me his mother's pearl necklace, which had been in her family for 400 years."

"I should not hesitate to take the necklace, Jerry, if he really produces it, for my sister, his wife, has never had the slightest glimpse of it, and it is, I believe, in the hands of certain English trustees for the benefit of the duke's creditors. I dislike to spoil one of his grace's pretty illusions, but unless Mr. Billings softens his heart a great deal toward the duke I fear that you will not get the pearls this summer."

"I must tell you as my chaperon, Mrs. Atchison, that the duke has already offered to elope with me. He told me last night as we were having our coffee on the terrace, that he would gladly give up his wife, meaning, I suppose, your sister, and the Ardmore millions for me; but while I think him fascinating I want you to feel quite safe, for I promise you I shall elope with no one while I am your guest."

Mrs. Atchison's face had grown a little white and she compressed her lips in lines that were the least bit grim.

"The scoundrel!" she exclaimed half under her breath. "To think that he would insult a child like you! He is hanging about us here in the hope of getting more money, while my poor sister, his wife, is in an English sanatorium half crazed by his brutality. If Tommy knew this he would undoubtedly kill him!"

"That would be very unnecessary. A duke, after all, is something, and I should hate to have the poor man killed on my account. And besides, Mrs. Atchison, I am perfectly able to take care of myself."

"I believe you are, Jerry. But it's a terrible thing to have that beast about, and I shall tell him to-night that he must leave this place and the country."

"But first," said Jerry, "I have an engagement to ride with him after dinner to see the moon, and the opportunity of seeing a moon with a duke of ancient family, here on the sacred soil of North Carolina, is something that I cannot lightly put aside."

"You cannot—you must not go!"

"Leave it to me," said Jerry, smiling slightly; "and I promise you that the duke will never again insult an American girl. And now I think I must dress for dinner."

"I Hope That You Have Not Given Tommy Any Commission in Which He is Likely to Fail."

CHAPTER XII.

The Embarrassments of the Duke of Ballywinkle.

Mr. Frank Collins of the Atlanta Palladium trod the ties beyond Kildare with a light heart, gaily swinging a large suit-case. He had walked far, but a narrow-brim straw hat, perched on the back of his head, and the cheery lilt of the waltz he whistled spoke for a jaunty spirit. As his eye ranged the landscape he marked a faint cloud of smoke rising beyond a lonely strip of wood; and coming to a dilapidated piece of track that led vaguely away into the heart of the forest, he again noted the tiny smoke cloud. On such a day the half-gods go and the gods arrive; and the world that afternoon knew no cheerfuller spirit than the Palladium's agile young commissioner. Mr. Collins was not only in capital health and spirits, but he rejoiced in that delicious titillation of expectancy which is the chief compensation of the journalist's life. His mission was secret, and this in itself gave flavor to his errand; and, moreover, it promised adventures of a kind that were greatly to his liking.

As the woodland closed in about him and the curving spur carried him farther from the main right of way he ceased whistling and his steps became more guarded. Suddenly a man rose from the bushes and leveled a long arm at him detainingly.

"Stop, young man, stop where you are!"

"Hello!" called Collins, pausing. "Well, I'm jiggered, if it ain't old Cookie. I say, old man, is the untaxed juice flowing in the forest primeval or what brings you here?"

Cooke grinned as he recalled the reporter, whom he remembered as a particularly irrepressible specimen of his genus whom he had met while pursuing moonshiners in Georgia. The two shook hands amiably midway of the two streaks of rust.

COOKING THE EEL IN JAPAN

Patron Chooses His Delicacy, Which Is Prepared for the Table Before His Eyes.

Entering a Japanese restaurant, a guest who wishes broiled eels and rice is led to a tank of squirming fresh water eels and bidden to point out the object of his preference. The cook, who stands by, says the Delineator, selects the wriggling victim of his choice, strikes its head smartly upon a wood block and, squatting by it, grasps the creature's neck, inserts a knife in the left side of the vertebrae and dextrously runs it down to the tail, then rapidly applying his instrument to the other side of the backbone, repeats the process, leaving the eel split open.

Then, chopping the flattened eel in to three-inch lengths, the pieces are plunged into boiling water to make the skin tender, long bamboo splints used as skewers are thrust through them, and they are then placed on rods over glowing charcoal and broiled brown, being plunged from time to time into a vessel that contains old soy of the color and consistency of molasses. These preparations concluded, the steaming eels are drained and placed in red lacquer boxes with rice and set before the customer.

Bedsteads in a Wall.

During a fire in Nampa, Idaho., a whole square was destroyed, among the buildings being a furniture store, the proprietor of which showed his pluck by immediately commencing the erection of a new building of concrete. Having at the time a carload of iron beds on hand, he had them encased in the walls to lend strength to the building by holding the cement together, the walls being modelled round bedsteads. The building will probably be something of a wonder to a later generation when it falls into decay.

If we knew all it would be easier to forgive all.

MASONS TO MEET

Grand Lodge will Hold Session at Waterloo June 10-16

DETAILED PROGRAM ISSUED

Fourteen Hundred Visitors Expected in City for Meeting—Past Grand Masters Will Be Presented With Jewels.

Waterloo, Ia., June 6.—The detailed program for the meeting of the Masonic grand lodge in Waterloo from June 10 to 16 has been issued. The school of instruction will be held June 10, 11 and 13. The first session of the grand lodge proper will be held Tuesday morning. At this session the past grand master's jewels ordered at the last session, will be presented to all resident past grand masters in attendance.

The election of grand officers will occur Wednesday afternoon, June 15. Each evening the local committee will furnish some form of entertainment for the 1,400 visitors who are expected.

Grand Secretary Parvin of Cedar Rapids, in a recent bulletin, states that the suspensions from the order during the year were quite numerous, about 500. He says:

"Five of the largest lodges in Iowa, with a combined membership of 2,200 do not report a single suspension, while one of our lodges, with less than 175 members, reports eighteen suspended. About 100 of the lodges show a decrease in membership, while one-half of that number about hold their own. Marion lodge No. 6 reports conferring the largest number of degrees of any lodge during the year, 140. The total increase for the year will not be as great as was expected, being in the neighborhood of 1,500. This is due to the fact that the decrease of the year amounts to over 2,200; however, we are more than holding our own and gaining at a reasonable rate, and Masonry seems to be prospering throughout the entire jurisdiction."

It is also said that when the road bed is repaired and other improvements made to the satisfaction of the officials several new fast trains will be added to the service.

Waldorf's Year Closes.

Forest City.—Waldorf college of this place has just closed a most successful school year, the graduates in all departments numbering twenty-nine. The total enrollment for the year was about 225, and while this is not as great as in some previous years, a larger number remained in school during the entire year than ever before. Plans are on foot to enlarge the capacity of the college buildings and to increase the facilities for training the increased number of students that will be attracted to this center of learning next fall. Aids Nature

The great success of Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery in curing weak stomachs, wasted bodies, weak lungs, and obstinate and lingering coughs, is based on the recognition of the fundamental truth that "Golden Medical Discovery" supplies Nature with body-building, tissue-repairing, muscle-making materials, in condensed and concentrated form. With this help Nature supplies the necessary strength to the stomach to digest food, build up the body and thereby throw off lingering obstinate coughs. The "Discovery" re-establishes the digestive and nutritive organs in sound health, purifies and enriches the blood, and nourishes the nerves—in short establishes sound vigorous health.

If your dealer offers something "just as good," it is probably better FOR HIM...it pays better. But you are thinking of the cure not the profit, so there's nothing "just as good" for you. Say so.

A Master of the Art of News-Letter Writing

William E. Curtis, the famous correspondent of the Chicago Record-Herald, probably has a more enviable position and is read by more men and women daily than any other newspaper writer in the United States. He can go anywhere in the world and write on any live topic that he chooses, so long as he interests his hundreds of thousands of readers. He has traveled several times around the world and written entertainingly about almost every country under the sun.

Every day in the year, without vacation or intermission, Mr. Curtis has a two-column letter in the Record-Herald. The remarkable thing about these letters is their power to interest all classes of readers. Women read them with the same enjoyment as men. Whether the subject be politics, travels, a new kink in the Monroe doctrine, an interview with the newest money king or the personal history of an Egyptian mummy, the story is always told with a limpid simplicity and an unfailing sense of interest that keeps one reading to the end. No other correspondent now living can match the record of Mr. Curtis as a popular purveyor of timely and useful information. Whether he writes from his home in Washington or from the wilds of Mexico, from the gay streets of Paris or some remote temple in India, he always has something fresh and entertaining to tell.

Mr. Curtis began his newspaper career in Chicago as a reporter in 1872, speedily became a managing editor, resigned to serve as secretary of a government commission sent to South America, and fulfilled his duties so brilliantly there that Secretary James G. Blaine placed him at the head of the new bureau of American republics. He is almost as widely known in South America and Europe as in the United States. At the world's fair in Chicago he was the executive head of the Latin-American department. He is a member of almost every learned society in Washington and many in Europe.

Nobody outside of the Record-Herald office knows under what flag Mr. Curtis will next be hanging up his hat, but everybody knows that, whether it be in Patagonia or Kamchatka, he will find something interesting to write about. Merely to read his daily news-letters is a liberal education. He does his full share toward making the Chicago Record-Herald the best home newspaper in the West.

"It cured me" or "It saved the life of my child," are the expressions you hear every day about Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhoea Remedy. This is true the world over where this valuable remedy has been introduced. No other medicine in use for diarrhoea or bowel complaints has received such general approval. The secret of the success of Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhoea Remedy is that it cures. Sold by all dealers.

Open Letter to the Readers of "The Klemme Times."

My first "Open Letter" is in your care. In submitting a second and last one, my motive is, to place you in a position from which an impartial view of the controversy may be obtained, and I know, that all readers who are not prepossessed, will thank me for my frankness and understand my conclusions. Here I wish to state that I am in dead earnest and I may fall into ridicule before I am done.

I will now state the circumstances briefly, which brought about my meeting with our man, the bush whacker. Mr. E. Upmeier and wife and Mr Ed. Griffen and wife extended to me an invitation, to unite in holy wedlock their children, Miss Alice and Mr. Rudolph. This took place April 20th this year. After the ceremony we were ushered to the table, which was pleasantly spread under a tent. A stranger had his seat given him to my left. I did not know him and inquired for his name and residence, which he kindly gave me. It was the Rev. Wessel, Methodistic preacher in Klemme, Iowa. We partook of the excellent meal, during which I occasionly crackt a joke. I was not aware that the neighbor to my left had any ill feeling toward me, for he acted the gentleman. After we had done our duty to the many good things, I was requested to offer thanks. I did so and then strolled about until it was time to return home. I did not even dream that mischief was lurking and working in the core of Wessel, I knew of nothing and to this day know of nothing I should make an apology for to Wessel. But he must have been full of ire which, vagabonding about, found vent in our little paper, the innocent "Times." Wessel linked me to the Lutheran minister. I thank Wessel for linking me to a man, who dared to do right, who dared to be true and of whose company I am proud, though he be of a different denomination and who would probably deny me his pulpit if I asked to occupy it. As to Wessel I most emphatically desire, that he ignore me and I do faithfully promise him, that I will exchange courtesies for I would rather be alone than in bad company. I do not know whether the readers fully understand the reply of the Lutheran minister, but it is brimful of wisdom, honesty, courage of conviction, manly fortitude and I subscribe to its every word. I can read in it: Fidelity to his sacred vow of ordination; loyalty to his colors; ability in defense of them; unwavering determination to suffer the utmost in case of their jeopardy. All this Wessel considered as a mere matter of opinion. He held it for a boyish toy and grew mad, when Rev. Koch did not permit him to play with it as a boy would play with the jackknife of his chum. Now I ask: Is honesty of conviction; sacred vow of ordination, all mental toil in search for truth; all anguish suffered in pursuit of confirmation; all suffering endured and steadfastness, manly exhibited in the face of awaiting ridicule, slander and bushwhackery—is all this a toy, a nothing, a matter merely of opinion? If it is—Reader draw the consequences. I could do it for you, but I dread! You may drop into a fearful abyss of more fearful doubt. Whenever my congregation is before me, I urge them, to investigate calmly, soberly, quietly. I hate, I detest a bona fide consent; I want to convince! I admit, that ignorance may be bliss and that stupidity may be a godsend, but it should not be abused, but when truth is supplanted by emotional stupification, be it ever so pious in appearance, I say: Reader beware, beware! If you are under the influence of a religious emotional stupifactor, the result will be a serious glory-hallellujah stupification. You must judge me, me, me and every other preacher soberly, calmly, thoughtfully, and you will arrive at conclusions which must bring with them, maybe, many external and spiritual contentions, but too, great, grand, precious assurance in the perfection of the atonement of Christ Jesus! Since Wessel linked me to the Lutheran gentleman, I must share in the inequities discovered by the "holy man." He finds him wanting in the "christian spirit." As to myself, I candidly admit that I am wanting in the spirit of Christ! Wessel seems brimful of it and overflowing, it was stagnated in his article in the "Times" creating a nasty mudpuddle, a fit lurking place for toads and reptiles of the snakey order. If Wessel ever put his "christian spirit" on the market, whether in bulk or packages, I hope it will be under the "Pure Food Law" and should it be found to correspond to the spirit manifested in his articles in the "Times," a fit abode for it would be the carcass of an ass, and wherever I meet it I am ready to lash it with all the gall that is in me. It was This spirit That divined To him The motive of my inquiry after his name and residence. If Wessel says That I was impudent, if he asserts. That my inquiry was NOT sincere—I say: Wessel, in The face of God, you are wrong. I did not know you, and now do not care To. Wessel has never been asked To sign his name To his articles. A gentleman will refuse To be asked, whenever dire necessity compels him To attack his fellowman in a public paper. If Wessel does not know so much, he had better brush up his manners.

To The editor I extend my thanks for putting on his softest glove, Taking The bush whacker by his venerable lug and pettingly ushering him into our view. This religious bush whacker is The Rev. Wessel, of Klemme, Iowa, Methodistic preacher.

Dear Reader: I would have preferred To remain obscure, but you will understand That it was my bounden duty To make reply to the bushwhackerous challenge. My sentiment is:

"If you wish to conquer,
Strike with all your might!
Keep to the right, boys,
Keep to the right!"

I am for honesty, and honest conviction against all emotional stupifaction nd religious bush whackery.

Very respectfully yours,

REEMT KIRCHHEFER,
Reformed Pastor.

In an article in this paper two weeks ago in connection with the differences existing among some of the ministers of the gospel, the name of Rev. Achtermann appears without any reason whatsoever, as he had nothing to do one way or another with the controversy, and we feel that bringing his name into the affair was wholly without sense or reason. He was not interested in the least in the affair and in justice to him we say that his name should have been left out of the controversy altogether,

WESTERN CANADA
What Prof. Shaw, the Well-Known Agriculturist, Says About It:

"I would sooner raise cattle in Western Canada than in the corn belt of the United States. Feed is cheaper and climate better for the purpose. Your market will improve faster than your farmers will produce the supplies. Wheat can be grown up to the 60th parallel (800 miles north of the International boundary). Your vacant land will be taken at a rate beyond present conception. We have enough people in the United States alone who want homes to take up this land." Near

ROOSEVELT GIVES ROMANES LECTURE

Former President of United States at Oxford

LORD CURZON IN THE CHAIR

Sheldonian Theater Crowded With Distinguished People When American Talks on "Biological Analogies in History."

Oxford, England.—The Romanes lecture by Theodore Roosevelt, which was to have been delivered on May 18, but which was postponed on account of the death of King Edward, was given on June 7 by the distinguished American. The Sheldonian theater was filled to its capacity by notable persons and Oxford students and the lecture, which was on "Biological Analogies in History," was well received. Lord Curzon, chancellor of the university, presided.

In seeking to penetrate the causes of the mysteries that surround not only mankind but all life, both in the present and the past, said Mr. Roosevelt, we see strange analogies in the phenomena of life and death, of birth growth and change, between those physical groups of animal life which we designate as species, forms, races and the highly complex and composite entities which rise before our minds when we speak of nations and civilizations. It is this study, he asserted, that has given science its present-day prominence, and the historian of mankind must work in the scientific spirit and use the treasure-houses of science.

To illustrate, the lecturer took several instances of the development of new species and the extinction of species in the history of mammalian life, showing that in some cases the causes can be traced with considerable accuracy, and in other cases we cannot so much as hazard a guess as to why a given change occurred.

Analogies in Human History.

Continuing, Mr. Roosevelt said in part:

Now, as to all of these phenomena in the evolution of species, there are, if not homologies, at least certain analogies, in the history of human societies, in the history of the rise to prominence, of the development and change, of the temporary dominance, and death or transformation, of the groups of varying kind which form races or nations.

As in biology, so in human history, a new form may result from the specialization of a long-existing and hitherto very slowly-changing generalized or non-specialized form; as, for instance, when a barbaric race from a variety of causes suddenly develops a more complex cultivation and civilization. That is what occurred, for instance, in western Europe during the centuries of the Teutonic and later the Scandinavian ethnic overflows from the north. All the modern countries of western Europe are descended from the states created by these northern invaders. When first created they could be called "new" or "young" states in the sense that part or all of the people composing them were descended from races that hitherto had not been civilized at all, and that therefore for the first time entered on the career of civilized communities. In the southern part of western Europe the new states thus formed consisted in bulk of the inhabitants already in the land under the Roman empire; and it was here that the new kingdoms first took shape. Through a reflex action their influence then extended back into the cold forests from which the invaders had come, and Germany and Scandinavia witnessed the rise of communities with essentially the same civilization as their southern neighbors; though in those communities, unlike the southern communities, there was no infusion of new blood, and in each case the new civilized nation which gradually developed was composed entirely of members of the same race which in the same region had for ages lived the life of a slowly changing barbarism. The same was true of the Slavs and the Slavonized Finns of eastern Europe, when an infiltration of Scandinavian leaders from the north and infiltration of Byzantine culture from the south joined to produce the changes which have gradually, out of the little Slav communities of the forest and the steppe, formed the mighty Russian empire of today.

"New" and "Young" Nations.

Again, the new form may represent merely a splitting off from a long-established, highly developed and specialized nation. In this case the nation is usually spoken of as a "young," and is correctly spoken of as a "new," nation; but the term should always be used with a clear sense of the difference between what is described in such case, and what is described by the same term in speaking of a civilized nation just developed from a barbarism. Carthage and Syracuse were new cities compared with Tyre and Corinth; but the Greek or Phoenician race was in every sense of the word as old in the new city as in the old city. So, nowadays, Victoria or Manitoba is a new community compared with England or Scotland; but the ancestral type of civilization and culture is as old in one case as in the other. I of course do not mean for a moment that great changes are not produced by the mere fact that the old civilized race is suddenly placed in surroundings where it has again to go through the work of taming the wilderness, a work finished many centuries before in the original home of the race; I merely mean that the ancestral history is the same in each case. We can rightly use the phrase "a new people" in speaking of Canadians or Australians, Americans or Afrikanders. But we use it in an entirely different sense from that in which we use it when speaking of such communities as those founded by the northmen and their descendants during that period of astonishing growth which saw the descendants of the Norse sea-thieves conquer and transform Normandy, Sicily, and the British islands; we use it in an entirely different sense from that in which we use it when speaking of the new states that grew up around Warsaw, Kief, Novgorod, and Moscow, as the wild savages of the steppes and the marshy forests struggled haltingly and stumblingly upward to become builders of cities and to form stable governments. The kingdoms of Charlemagne and Alfred were "new," compared with the empire on the Bosphorus; they were also in every way different; their lines of ancestral descent had nothing in common with those of the polyglot realm which paid tribute to the Caesars of Byzantium; their social problems and aftertime history were totally different. This is not true of those "new" nations which spring direct from old nations. Brazil, the Argentine, the United States, are all "new" nations, compared with the nations of Europe; but with whatever changes in detail, their civilization is nevertheless of the general European type, as shown in Portugal, Spain, and England. The differences between these "new" American and these "old" European nations are not as great as those which separate the "new" nations one from another and the "old" nations one from another. There are in each case very real differences between the new and the old nation—differences both for good and for evil; but in each case there is the same ancestral history to reckon with, the same type of civilization, with its attendant benefits and shortcomings; and, after the pioneer stages are passed, the problems to be solved, in spite of superficial differences, are in their essence the same; they are those that confront all civilized peoples, not those that confront peoples struggling from barbarism into civilization.

So, when we speak of the "death" of a tribe, a nation or a civilization, the term may be used for either one or two totally different processes; the analogy with what occurs in biological history being complete. Certain tribes of savages, the Tasmanians, for instance, and various little clans of American Indians, have within the last century or two completely died out; all of the individuals have perished, leaving no descendants, and the blood has disappeared. Certain other tribes of Indians have as tribes disappeared or are now disappearing; but their blood remains, being absorbed into the veins of the white intruders, or of the black men introduced by these white intruders; so that in reality they are merely being transformed into something absolutely different from what they were.

A like wide diversity in fact may be covered in the statement that a civilization has "died out."

Phenomena That Puzzle.

In dealing, not with groups of human beings in simple and primitive relations, but with highly complex, highly specialized, civilized, or semi-civilized societies, there is need of great caution in drawing analogies with what has occurred in the development of the animal world. Yet even in these cases it is curious to see how some of the phenomena in the growth and disappearance of these complex, artificial groups of human beings resemble what has happened in myriads of instances in the history of life on this planet.

Why do great artificial empires, whose citizens are knit by a bond of speech and culture much more than by a bond of blood, show periods of extraordinary growth, and again of sudden or lingering decay? In some cases we can answer readily enough; in other cases we cannot as yet even guess what the proper answer should be. If in any such case the centrifugal forces overcome the centripetal, the nation will of course fly to pieces, and the reason for its failure to become a dominant force is patent to every one. The minute that the spirit which finds its healthy development in local self-government, and in the antidote to the dangers of an extreme centralization, develops into mere particularism, into inability to combine effectively for achievement of a common end, then it is hopeless to expect great results. Poland and certain republics of the western hemisphere are the standard examples of failure of this kind; and the United States would have ranked with them, and its name would have become a byword of derision, if the forces of union had not triumphed in the civil war. So the growth of soft luxury after it has reached a certain point becomes a national danger patent to all. Again, it needs but little of the vision of a seer to foretell what must happen in any community if the average woman ceases to become the mother of a family of healthy children, if the average man loses the will and the power to work up to old age and to fight whenever the need arises. If the homely, commonplace virtues die out, if strength of character vanishes in graceful self-indulgence, if the virile qualities atrophy, then the nation has lost what no material prosperity can offset.

But there are plenty of other phenomena wholly or partially inexplicable. It is easy to see why Rome trended downward when great slave-tilled farms spread over what had once been a countryside of peasant proprietors, when greed and luxury and sensuality ate like acids into the fiber of the upper classes, while the mass of the citizens grew to depend, not upon their own exertions, but upon the state, for their pleasures and their very livelihood. But this does not explain why the forward movement stopped at different times, so far as different matters were concerned; at one time as regards literature, at another time as regards architecture, at another time as regards city building. We cannot even guess why the springs of one kind of energy dried up while there was yet no cessation of another kind.

Holland as an Example.

Take another and smaller instance, that of Holland. For a period covering a little more than the seventeenth century, Holland, like some of the Italian city states at an earlier period, stood on the dangerous heights of greatness beside nations so vastly her superior in territory and population as to make it inevitable that sooner or later she must fall from the glorious and perilous eminence to which she had been raised by her own indomitable soul. Her fall came; it could not have been indefinitely postponed; but it came far quicker than it needed to come, because of shortcomings on her part to which both Great Britain and the United States would be wise to pay heed. Her government was singularly ineffective, the decentralization being such as often to permit the separatist, the particularist, spirit of the provinces to rob the central authority of all efficiency. This was bad enough. But the fatal weakness was that so common in rich, peace-loving societies, where men hate to think of war as possible, and try to justify their own reluctance to face it either by high-sounding moral platitudes or else by a philosophy of short-sighted materialism. The Dutch were very wealthy. They grew to believe that they could hire others to do their fighting for them on land; and on sea, where they did their own fighting, and fought very well, they refused in time of peace to make ready fleets so efficient as either to insure the Dutch against the peace being broken or else to give them the victory when war came. To be opulent and unarmed is to secure ease in the present at the almost certain cost of disaster in the future.

It is therefore easy to see why Holland lost when she did her position among the powers; but it is far more difficult to explain why at the same time there should have come at least a partial loss of position in the world of art and letters. Some spark of divine fire burned itself out in the national soul. As the line of great statesmen, of great warriors, by land and sea, came to an end, so the line of the great Dutch painters ended. The loss of pre-eminence in the schools followed the loss of pre-eminence in camp and in council chamber.

In the little republic of Holland, as in the great empire of Rome, it was not death which came, but transformation. Both Holland and Italy teach us that races that fall may rise again.

Danger of Race Suicide.

There are questions which we of the great civilized nations are ever tempted to ask of the future. Is our time of growth drawing to an end? Are we as nations soon to come under the rule of that great law of death, which is itself but part of the great law of life? None can tell. Forces that we can see and other forces that are hidden or that can but dimly be apprehended are at work all around us, both for good and for evil. The growth in luxury, in love of ease, in taste for vapid and frivolous excitement, is both evident and unhealthy. The most ominous sign is the diminution in the birth-rate, in the rate of natural increase, now to a larger or lesser degree shared by most of the civilized nations of central and western Europe, of America and Australia; a diminution so great that if it continues for the next century at the rate which has obtained for the last 25 years, all the more highly civilized people will be stationary or else have begun to go backward in population, while many of them will have already gone very far backward.

There is much that should give us concern for the future. But there is much also which should give us hope. No man is more apt to be mistaken than the prophet of evil. I believe with all my heart that a great future remains for us; but whether it does or does not, our duty is not altered. However the battle may go, the soldier worthy of the name will with utmost vigor do his allotted task, and bear himself as valiantly in defeat as in victory. Come what will, we belong to peoples who have not yielded to the craven fear of being great. In the ages that have gone by, the great nations, the nations that have expanded and that have played a mighty part in the world, have in the end grown old and weakened and vanished; but so have the nations whose only thought was to avoid all danger, all effort, who would risk nothing, and who therefore gained nothing. In the end the same fate may overwhelm all alike; but the memory of the one type perishes with it while the other leaves its mark deep on the history of all the future of mankind.

In the first part of this lecture I drew certain analogies between what had occurred to forms of animal life through the procession of the ages on this planet, and what has occurred and is occurring to the great artificial civilizations which have gradually spread over the world's surface during the thousands of years that have elapsed since cities of temples and palaces first rose beside the Nile and the Euphrates, and the harbors of Minoan Crete bristled with the masts of the Aegean craft. But of course the parallel is true only in the roughest and most general way. Moreover, even between the civilizations of today and the civilizations of ancient times there are differences so profound that we must be cautious in drawing any conclusions for the present based on what has happened in the past. While freely admitting all of our follies and weaknesses of today, it is yet mere perversity to refuse to realize the incredible advance that has been made in ethical standards. I do not believe that there is the slightest necessary connection between any weakening of virile force and this advance in the moral standard, this growth of the sense of obligation to one's neighbor and of reluctance to do that neighbor wrong. We need have scant patience with that silly cynicism which insists that kindliness of character only accompanies weakness of character. On the contrary, just as in private life many of the men of strongest character are the very men of loftiest and most exalted morality, so I believe that in national life as the ages go by we shall find that the permanent national types will more and more tend towards those in which, while the intellect stands high, character stands higher; in which rugged strength and courage, rugged capacity to resist wrongful aggression by others, will go hand in hand with a lofty scorn of doing wrong to others. This is the type of Timoleon, of Hampden, of Washington and Lincoln.

Problems of Modern Nations.

Every modern civilized nation has many and terrible problems to solve within its own borders, problems that arise not merely from juxtaposition of poverty and riches, but especially from the self-consciousness of both poverty and riches. Each nation must deal with these matters in its own fashion, and yet the spirit in which the problem is approached must ever be fundamentally the same. It must be a spirit of broad humanity; of brotherly kindness; of acceptance of responsibility, one for each and each for all; and at the same time a spirit as remote as the poles from every form of weakness and sentimentality. As in war to pardon the coward is to do cruel wrong to the brave man whose life his cowardice jeopardizes, so in civil affairs it is revolting to every principle of justice to give to the lazy, the vicious, or even the feeble and dull-witted, a reward which is really the robbery of what braver, wiser, abler men have earned. The only effective way to help any man is to help him to help himself; and the worst lesson to teach him is that he can be permanently helped at the expense of some one else. True liberty shows itself to best advantage in protecting the rights of others, and especially of minorities. Privilege should not be tolerated because it is to the advantage of a minority, nor yet because it is to the advantage of a majority. No doctrinaire theories of vested rights or freedom of contract can stand in the way of our cutting out abuses from the body politic. Just a little can we afford to follow the doctrinaires of an impossible—and incidentally of a highly undesirable—social revolution which, in destroying individual rights (including property rights) and the family, would destroy the two chief agents in the advance of mankind, and the two chief reasons why either the advance or the preservation of mankind is worth while. It is an evil and a dreadful thing to be callous to sorrow and suffering, and blind to our duty to do all things possible for the betterment of social conditions. But it is an unspeakably foolish thing to strive for this betterment by means so destructive that they would leave no social conditions to better. In dealing with all these social problems, with the intimate relations of the family, with wealth in private use and business use, with labor, with poverty, the one prime necessity is to remember that, though hardness of heart is a great evil, it is no greater an evil than softness of head.

But in addition to these problems the most intimate and important of all which to a larger or less degree affect all the modern nations somewhat alike, we of the great nations that have expanded, that are now in complicated relations with one another and with alien races, have special problems and special duties of our own. You belong to a nation which possesses the greatest empire upon which the sun has ever shone. I belong to a nation which is trying, on a scale hitherto unexampled, to work out the problems of government for, of, and by the people, while at the same time doing the international duty of a great power. But there are certain problems which both of us have to solve, and as to which our standards should be the same. The Englishman, the man of the British isles, in his various homes across the seas, and the American, both at home and abroad, are brought into contact with utterly alien peoples, some with a civilization more ancient than our own, others still in, or having but recently arisen from, the barbarism which our people left behind ages ago. The problems that arise are of well-nigh inconceivable difficulty. They cannot be solved by the foolish sentimentality of stay-at-home people, with little patent recipes, and those cut-and-dried theories of the political nursery which have such limited applicability amid the crash of elemental forces. Neither can they be solved by the raw brutality of the men who, whether at home or on the rough frontier of civilization, adopt might as the only standard of right in dealing with other men, and treat alien races only as subjects for exploitation.

No hard and fast rule can be drawn as applying to all alien races, because they differ from one another far more widely than some of them differ from us. But there are one or two rules which must not be forgotten. In the long run, there can be no justification for one race managing or controlling another unless the management and control are exercised in the interest and for the benefit of that other race. This is what our peoples have in the main done, and must continue in the future in even greater degree to do, in India, Egypt, and the Philippines alike. In the next place, as regards every race, everywhere, at home or abroad, we cannot afford to deviate from the great rule of righteousness which bids us treat each man on his worth as a man. He must not be sentimentally favored because he belongs to a given race; he must not be given immunity in wrong-doing, or permitted to cumber the ground, or given other privileges which would be denied to the vicious and unfit among themselves. On the other hand, where he acts in a way which would entitle him to respect and reward if he were of our own stock, he is just as much entitled to that respect and reward if he comes of another stock, even though that other stock produces a much smaller proportion of men of his type than does our own. This has nothing to do with social intermingling, with what is called social equality. It has to do merely with the question of doing to each man and each woman that elementary justice which will permit him or her to gain from life the reward which should always accompany thrift, sobriety, self-control, respect for the rights of others, and hard and intelligent work to a given end. To more than such just treatment no man is entitled, and less than such just treatment no man should receive.

Duty of Nation to Nation.

The other type of duty is the international duty, the duty owed by one nation to another. I hold that the laws of morality which should govern individuals in their dealings one with the other are just as binding concerning nations in their dealings one with the other. The application of the moral law must be different in the two cases, because in one case it has, and in the other it has not, the sanction of a civil law with force behind it. The individual can depend for his rights upon the courts, which themselves derive their force from the police power of the state. The nation can depend upon nothing of the kind; and therefore, as things are now, it is the highest duty of the most advanced and freest peoples to keep themselves in such a state of readiness as to forbid to any barbarism or despotism the hope of arresting the progress of the world by striking down the nations that lead in that progress. It would be foolish indeed to pay heed to the unwise persons who desire disarmament to be begun by the very peoples who, of all others, should not be left helpless before any possible foe. But we must reprobate quite as strongly both the leaders and the peoples who practise, or encourage or condone, aggression and iniquity by the strong at the expense of the weak. We should tolerate lawlessness and wickedness neither by the weak nor by the strong; and both weak and strong we should in return treat with scrupulous fairness. The foreign policy of a great and self-respecting country should be conducted on exactly the same plane of honor, of insistence upon one's own rights and of respect for the rights of others, as when a brave and honorable man is dealing with his fellows. Permit me to support this statement out of my own experience. For nearly eight years I was the head of a great nation and charged especially with the conduct of its foreign policy; and during those years I took no action with reference to any other people on the face of the earth that I would not have felt justified in taking as an individual in dealing with other individuals.

I believe that we of the great civilized nations of today have a right to feel that long careers of achievement lie before our several countries. To each of us is vouchsafed the honorable privilege of doing his part, however small, in that work. Let us strive hardily for success, even if by so doing we risk failure, spurning the poorer souls of small endeavor who know neither failure nor success. Let us hope that our own blood shall continue in the land, that our children and children's children to endless generations shall arise to take our places and play a mighty and dominant part in the world. But whether this be denied or granted by the years we shall not see, let at least the satisfaction be ours that we have carried onward the lighted torch in our own day and generation. If we do this, then, as our eyes close, and we go out into the darkness, and other hands grasp the torch, at least we can say that our part has been borne well and valiantly.

TRAMP KNEW HUMAN NATURE

Simple Stratagem That Secured for "Knight of the Road" a Substantial Meal.

A clever little bit of human nature was used by a "knight of the road" recently on a matron living in a suburb of Pittsburg, and as a result he slept with a full stomach that night.

The suburb is quite small, and when the tramp dropped off a freight and ambled up the main street he was quite hungry. There were about ten houses which gave fair chance of meals, and the tramp lost no time. He was not surprised when the first housewife slammed the door in his face, nor the second, for that was natural and the proper thing to do. But when he reached the ninth house, or rather was helped away, he was thoroughly disgusted. The town certainly had him hoodooed.

After a short rest and a deep think the hungry one knocked at the door of the tenth house.

"Madam, can you let a hungry man have a bite to eat? I don't think you can, though," he said. The woman opened her ears.

"Why can't I?" she inquired.

"The woman next door said you didn't have enough for yourself."

He got his meal.

FEED CHILDREN
On Properly Selected Food. It Pays Big Dividends.

If parents will give just a little intelligent thought to the feeding of their children the difference in the health of the little folks will pay, many times over, for the small trouble.

A mother writes saying: "Our children are all so much better and stronger than they ever were before we made a change in the character of the food. We have quit using potatoes three times a day with coffee and so much meat.

"Now we give the little folks some fruit, either fresh stewed, or canned, some Grape-Nuts with cream, occasionally some soft boiled eggs, and some Postum for breakfast and supper. Then for dinner they have some meat and vegetables.

"It would be hard to realize the change in the children, they have grown so sturdy and strong, and we attribute this change to the food elements that, I understand, exist in Grape-Nuts and Postum.

"A short time ago my baby was teething and had a great deal of stomach and bowel trouble. Nothing seemed to agree with him until I tried Grape-Nuts softened and mixed with rich milk, and he improved rapidly and got sturdy and well."

THE WEIGHT OF MONEY

Do You Think You Could Lift a Fortune In Silver Coins?

IF YOU DO YOU ARE MISTAKEN

Two Hundred Pounds of Quarters Would Give You Only $3,657, While the Same Weight of Gold Would Give $54,050—Weight of Paper Money

"I wish I had all the money I could lift!" How many of the thousands who make this get-rich-quick wish have any idea of the amount they would have if the wish should be granted. Few name the denomination of the money on which they desire to test their strength, perhaps believing that their lifting powers would make them wealthy no matter what kind of money they lifted.

If they were asked how much they could lift in silver or small bills the majority probably would name some fabulous sum which investigation would show several men could not budge. In gold or in paper money of large denominations the ordinary individual would be able to lift a fair sized fortune, but to win a million by lifting it in anything less than twenty dollar bills would need the strength of a veritable Sandow.

An official of the subtreasury who is interested in odd statistics in his department was asked how much money the average man could lift in the various denominations of gold, silver and paper.

"Well," he replied, "a man could make money on that proposition if he could get hold of paper money of large denominations, but on the smaller bills, silver and gold he would not be a millionaire by any means.

"The weight of money is very deceptive. For instance, a young man, a friend of mine, came in to see me one day with his fiancee. I was showing them through my department and asked my friend if he thought the young woman was worth her weight in gold. He did think so, most emphatically, and after ascertaining that her weight was one 107 pounds we figured that she would be worth in gold coin exactly $28,647. Her fiancee thought that would be pretty cheap.

"Perhaps more people are deceived on the weight of paper money than on the metals. Now, how many one dollar bills do you think would be necessary to weigh as much as a five dollar gold piece?"

Fifty was ventured as a guess, and the statistician laughed.

"I have had guesses on that all the way from 50 to 500," he said, "and some of them from men who have handled money for years. As a matter of fact, with a five dollar gold piece in one scale you would have to put about six and a half bills in the other to balance it."

He produced figures to prove that a five dollar gold piece weighed two hundred and ninety-six thousandths of an ounce avoirdupois. An employee who makes the new bills up in packages of 100 each said that a hundred bills weighed four and one-half ounces. That would make one bill weigh forty-five thousandths of an ounce, and between six and seven would balance the gold piece.

Figures on the lifting proposition were furnished from the department where the money is weighed in bags as standards. The standard amount for gold coin, $5,000, weighs eighteen and a half pounds. Five hundred silver dollars weigh thirty-five and a half pounds, and $200 in half dollars, or 400 coins, weighs eleven pounds. Taking 200 pounds as a good lift for an average man, these results were obtained:

METAL MONEY.
Gold coins (all of standard weight)	$54,050.00
Silver dollars	2,617.00
Half dollars	3,633.00
Quarters	3,657.00
Dimes	3,615.80
Nickels	917.00
Cents	295.01
PAPER MONEY.
One dollar bills	$71,111
Two dollar bills	142,222
Five dollar bills	355,555
Ten dollar bills	711,110
Twenty dollar bills	1,422,220
Fifty dollar bills	3,555,550
One hundred dollar bills	7,111,110
Five hundred dollar bills	35,555,550
Thousand dollar bills	71,111,100

Two hundred pounds of $10,000 gold certificates, the largest denomination issued by the United States government, would amount to enough to finance a full grown trust—$711,111,000. If the young woman who was worth $28,647 in gold coin had been worth her weight in these $10,000 certificates she would have been valued at $380,444,385.—F. T. Pope in Chicago Record-Herald.

Appreciated.

Tubb—Old boy, I want to congratulate you on your speech at the banquet last night. O'Sudds (after waiting a moment)—I know you do, pard, and you're awfully sorry you can't do it truthfully. I appreciate the effort, just the same. Nasty weather, isn't it?—Chicago Tribune.

A Misunderstanding.

"The management of one of the big opera houses in New York has to pay $2,000 a week for conductors."

"Does it pay the same rate for motormen?"—Judge.

Can you beat it?

Now for a good corn crop.

Claude R. Porter had a walk-away in the contest for the nomination for governor on the democratic ticket.

In Cerro Gordo county there were eight candidates for sheriff. No candidate received the necessary 35 per cent of the total vote, so the nomination will have to be made at the county convention.

For the benefit of the Kanawha Record and the Crystal Lake Chronicle, which papers seem to be disgruntled over the result of the primary election, we will state that the democrats have nominated a county ticket.

The republicans of Iowa believe in a square deal, so they re-nominated Carroll for a second term. We know of many progressive republicans who voted for Carroll because they could see no reason why a good governor should not be given the customary two terms.

Ouch!

Speaking on the result of the recent primary election, the Crystal Lake Chronicle, which seems to be pretty badly hurt, has the following:

"Working apparently on the theory that, 'We must all hang together or we shall each hang separately,' the Court House Gang landed the nomination for every one of their bunch by a good safe majority. Perpetuity in office has now been firmly established on the rock precedent. County elections will only be necessary now in case one of them should die, (which hardly ever happens) and it is possible that they may make some arrangement so that they can name their own successor in case of death. In order to break the monotony of the thing, they can swop jobs about once in four years. The only way that we can see for an outsider to break in, is to become an understudy for one of the main push."

LASTING Prosperity and safe banking grow in the same soil. The liberal policy of this bank for fair dealing and home development has raised a big crop of local prosperity. Our friends appreciate it.

GARNER, IOWA

GARNER CELEBRATES THE 4TH

A woman woke up her husband at dead of night and told him a burglar was in the house. "I don't want you to go after him," she explained, "but I do want you to remember that if you find anything missing from your pockets in the morning, it wasn't me."

On a Pullman sleeper, about seven o'clock in the morning, when the passengers were about ready to leave their berths, a baby in the stateroom began to cry lustily. Just at that moment the porter opened the door and sang out: "First call for breakfast." Then everybody laughed.—Ex

I carried home a mile of fence, for it was my desire, to read the late advertisements in comfort by the fire. I read of Jimsen's boots and shoes and Squildad's oats and hay; alas! the fence contained no news, I threw the thing away. I carried home a farmer's barn and held it on my lap, and read full many a tiresome yarn of bargain and of snap; it told me where to go for prunes and where to go for clocks, and where to buy my toy balloon, my bridal wreaths and socks; Alas! I cried, this tiresome barn has chilled my last fond hope, it simply isn't worth a darn for news and sporting dope! A bridge I lifted from its piers, and took it to my door and read, with eyes suffused with tears, the painted signs it bore. They told how Jones was selling tacks, that Smith was buying hides, that Brown would suit you with an ax, or hats for blooming brides. "This bridge," I cried, "is most absurd! It isn't worth a rap! It doesn't say a doggone word about the Jeffries-scrap!" My grandpa said: "Go take some seads—a weekly paper buy! In it you'll find a lot of ads that rest and soothe the eye; the news will occupy much space, all sorts of thrilling yarns; so do not clutter up the place with bridges and with barns."—Walt Mason.

Something to Laugh At

Next to a kiss a laugh is the most popular thing in the world. The supply of kisses is limited, being largely controlled by a fair but capricious trust. The supply of laughs, however, is practically unlimited so long as you don't get too grumpy to look for them. One reason for the remarkable success of the Chicago Record-Herald is its daily recognition of the value of kindly, wholesome fun. The "Alternating Currents" column of S. E. Kiser, the humorist and poet, is one of the brightest things in American journalism. There is always a smile or a good laugh in Ralph Wilder's cartoons, bringing a cheery greeting as you pick up the paper each morning.

But it is in the Sunday Record-Herald that one finds the most chuckles. The colored comic section is full of laughter for young and old, and these amusing illustrations are free from the vulgarity and mischevious suggestions that have barred so many comic sections from refined homes. Then there is always a lot of high-class humor in the Sunday Magazine of the Record-Herald, led by Sewell Ford's inimitable Shorty McCabe stories. The delectable Shorty, we understand, is to appear every other Sunday throughout the present year. No other character in fiction, unless it be Mr. Dooley, can match him as a fun-maker. As long as Shorty and his devoted Sadie are on deck there will be something worth living for. The Record-Herald has the right idea. Clean humor doubles the welcome of a good newspaper.

Docile Cheese.

Andrew Carnegie, while eating with appetite and courage last month the dishes cooked by the young girls of the Margaret Morrison school in Pittsburg, said:

"I have no fear before these experimental dishes. He who has eaten in France learns to eat boldly.

"Think of the French cheeses alone!

"Why, one afternoon in a restaurant in the Boulevard des Italiens, I heard a guest shout angrily:

"'Waiter, look here, this cheese is walking all over the table.'

"'Ah, have no fear, monsieur. It won't escape,' the waiter replied. 'If it goes too far, just call "Jules, Jules!" It always answers to its name.'"

Beware of Ointments for Catarrh that Contain Mercury, as mercury will surely destroy the sense of smell and completely derange the whole system when entering it through the mucous surfaces. Such articles should never be used except on prescriptions from reputable physicians, as the damage they will do is ten fold to the good you can possibly derive from them. Hall's Catarrh Cure, manufactured by F. J. Cheney & Co., Toledo, O., contains no mercury, and is taken internally, acting directly upon the blood and mucous surfaces of the system. In buying Hall's Catarrh Cure be sure you get the genuine. It is taken internally and made in Toledo, Ohio, by F. J. Cheney & Co. Testimonials free.

Colorado Lands Richer Than Gold Mines

There are bigger profits in eastern Colorado in pro tion to the cost of land than almost anywhere Colorado's agricultural products are more than double value of its mines.

Irrigation is unnecessary. By deep plowing and tinual shallow cultivation the soil never dries out du the growing season, making big crops and surprising pr on $5.00 to $20.00 land.

What Some Men Have Done

One man raised enough potatoes on 12 acres to buy 160 acres. Another man makes affidavit that he has not lost a crop in fifteen years.

Without irrigation one man's 800 cherry trees brought him $900. Five hundred plum trees produced $225. One hundred apple trees gave 300 bushels, $150; 1,400 currant bushes, three years old, yielded $225.

Hogs raised on alfalfa, fattened on corn (also raised on the same farm), cost $4 per head (including first cost of parent stock) and sell at top prices.

THING TO WORRY ABOUT

Complacent Smoker Had No Use for the Bands, so What Was the Difference.

There were four of them on the rear platform of a car, thrown together, so to speak, by a rough track. They were smoking. An odor, not of roses, detracted somewhat from interest in the general conversation. The odor became pronounced. One of the quartette cast about for a reason. He saw one of his companions complacently smoking a cigar that had burned down past the flaring red band that girdled it. There remained no question of the source of the odor. "Excuse me," the discoverer said to the complacent one, "your cigar band is burning."

Spoiling It.

"I've noticed that all unusually tall women are graceful."

"Thank you, Mr. Feathertop."

"Why, Miss Flossie—aw—you're not unusually tall, you know."

Apology.

"You have broken your word to me!" said the heiress, bitterly.

"Yes," replied Baron Fucash; "being a foreigner I can't help using a certain amount of broken English."

SAVED OLD LADY'S HAIR

"My mother used to have a very bad humor on her head which the doctors called an eczema, and for it I had two different doctors. Her head was very sore and her hair nearly all fell out in spite of what they both did. One day her niece came in and they were speaking of how her hair was falling out and the doctors did it no good. She says, 'Aunt, why don't you try Cuticura Soap and Cuticura Ointment?' Mother did and they helped her. In six months' time the itching, burning and scaling of her head was over and her hair began growing. Today she feels much in debt to Cuticura Soap and Ointment for the fine head of hair she has for an old lady of seventy-four.

"My own case was an eczema in my feet. As soon as the cold weather came my feet would itch and burn and then they would crack open and bleed. Then I thought I would flee to my mother's friends, Cuticura Soap and Cuticura Ointment. I did for four or five winters, and now my feet are as smooth as any one's. Aroused Sporting Instinct.

An Irish policeman who was also something of a sportsman, had been posted on a road near Dublin to catch the scorching motorist. Presently one came along at 20 miles an hour, and the policeman saw it pass without a sign. Next came a larger motor traveling at 40 miles an hour, and the eyes of the guardian of the public brightened. And then one passed at the rate of a mile a minute. "Begorrah," said Pat, slapping his thigh, "that's the best of the lot."

A MARK TWAIN STORY

Showing What May Be Achieved by Nerve and Reiteration.

A LESSON IN PERSEVERANCE.

Going to Prove That Repetition Will Work Wonders if a Man Has Only the Necessary Amount of Cheek to Stand Up and Keep on Talking.

Mark Twain once told a reporter that if a man says the same thing often enough people will begin to listen to him.

"Now," said the great humorist, "there was that story about Hank Monk. That was the oldest, stalest, driest, deadest bit of alleged humor that any man ever heard. It had been circulated around Nevada and California until there wasn't a man left who would even listen to it. I had heard it so many times that I knew it by heart. It told how Hank Monk got Horace Greeley over the Glennbrook grade to Placerville.

"I was about to deliver my second lecture at Platt's hall in San Francisco—the second one I had ever delivered. It occurred to me that I might begin that lecture with the worst story I had ever heard and by telling it often enough start the lecture with a big laugh. I took that story and memorized it so that it would not vary in the telling, and I made it just as pointless and just as dull and just as dry as I could.

"When it came time for me to talk I stood up and with a few introductory remarks began that story. If I remember it went something like this:

"'Horace Greeley once went over the Glennbrook grade to Placerville. When he was leaving Carson City he told the driver, Hank Monk, that he had an engagement to lecture at Placerville and was very anxious to go through quick. Hank Monk cracked his whip and started off at an awful pace. The stage bounced up and down in such a terrific way that it jolted the buttons all off Horace's coat and finally shot his head clean through the roof of the stage, and then he yelled to Hank Monk and begged him to go easier—said he warn't in as much of a hurry as he had been awhile ago. But Hank Monk said, "Keep your seat, Horace, and I'll get you there on time!" And he did, too—what was left of him.'

"Now, that was all there was to the story. It was bad enough to begin with, but I made it worse in the telling. I droned it out in a flat, monotonous tone, without a gesture to mar its depressing effect. The people received it in dead silence. I had insulted every man in the audience—I had 'graveled' them with a story that was not only stale and pointless, but one which they had heard at least a thousand times. I waited a few seconds for the laughter, and then I began to hem and haw and shift my feet. I tried to appear just as embarrassed as I could, and after floundering about helplessly for a few sentences I cheered up a little and said that I would tell a funny anecdote which might be new to them. It began:

"'Horace Greeley went over the Glennbrook grade to Placerville'—

"I told it in exactly the same miserable, pointless way that I had told it before, and when I got through I waited a longer time for the applause, but there wasn't any applause. I could see that several men in the house were growing quite indignant. They had paid money to hear a humorous lecture. I took a long breath and plunged in a third time, more embarrassed and flustered and worried than ever, and by and by I worked around again to the time when Horace Greeley went over Glennbrook grade to Placerville.

"This time some of the smarter ones began to laugh, and this encouraged me so much that I thanked them and started right in to tell the story over again, never varying the delivery so much as a pause to take breath. The fourth time fetched 'em, and at the end of the story they stood up and whooped and yelled and cheered for some time.

"You see, I thought that if a man had sand enough to stand up before an audience and tell the oldest, stalest and most uninteresting story in the world he could make people laugh if he had the nerve to tell the story often enough. The rest of my lecture went very well. They were willing to laugh at my anecdotes the first time I told them. Maybe they were afraid I would tell them a second time.

"I felt so sure that I had discovered a new phase in human character that I tried the same thing in New York years afterward. There was an authors' reading bee one afternoon, and most of the authors read selections from their works. I sat on the platform beside James Russell Lowell. He asked me what I was going to read. I said that I wasn't going to read anything. I intended to tell an anecdote.

"'Is it a funny one?' he asked.

"I said it would be if I lasted long enough.

"I started out without any preamble, and I told the Hank Monk anecdote. There was an awful silence at the end. I took a drink of water, mopped my forehead and told the story again. Same effect. Young man, I told that story five times before I landed 'em. When I sat down at last Mr. Lowell whispered to me:

"'You have cost me dear I have been sitting here and wasting sympathy on you.'

"That's the point, young man. Repetition will do anything if a man has the sand to stand up and keep on talking."—New York American.

We do know that some of the party had red noses when they returned, but they lay the blame onto Old Sol's rays. GRANDMA SCHWICHTENBERG

After a lingering illness of several weeks, the summons of death came to Mrs. Fred Schwichtenberg—better known as Grandma Schwichtenberg—Tuesday afternoon, and her spirit departed to the realms from which no wanderer ever returns. She was born 76 years ago in Saxony, Germany, and came to this country when a girl of 15. Her maiden name was Ida Silbersack. Her parents died while she was quite young. She at first made her home at Kenosha, Wis., where she met Frederick Schwichtenberg and was joined to him in marriage in 1851. Three years later they moved to Elkport, Clayton county, Iowa, where they bought a piece of land and built up a home. To them were born eight children, six of them having preceded their mother in death. Three daughters rest beneath the sod in the Klemme cemetery and a son in Garner. Those remaining are John Schwichtenberg of this place, and Mrs. Herman Brockmeyer, of Colesburg. Her husband passed away 17 years ago, and was interred in the Colesburg cemetery, where the deceased will be placed by his side.

Mrs. Schwichtenberg was a member of the M. E. church for more than 60 years and always bore the highest respect. She was intelligent and possessed exceptional endowments. In her younger days she was jovial and of a most cheerful disposition. She passed through many hardships, but bore them patiently. When the final summons came it found her well prepared and ready to enter into rest.

The funeral services were held Wednesday afternoon from the German M. E. church and the remains were taken to the evening train and shipped to Dyersvill, via Iowa Falls, and from there they will be taken overland to Colesburg, where interment will take place this afternoon. A number of friends accompanied the remains to their last resting place.

TRAIN KILLS SUTTON

Was Wanted in Des Moines For Passing Worthless Checks

CAUGHT BY ALGONA SHERIFF

Believed That Sutton Threw Himself Beneath Wheels of Train With Intention of Committing Suicide—Woman In Case.

Des Moines, June 13.—J. A. Sutton, aged 48 years, president of the Sioux Remedy company of Algona, was probably instantly killed at 8 o'clock Saturday night near the railway station at Algona by a Northwestern passenger train bound for Des Moines. It is thought that Sutton threw himself beneath the wheels of the train with the intention of commiting suicide.

Mr. Sutton was wanted by the authorities of Des Moines and of other Iowa cities for passing worthless checks. Saturday he was arrested by Sheriff J. E. Lillie of Algona but escaped during the afternoon. He was not heard from again until his mangled body was discovered near the Northwestern tracks.

From all that can be learned of the life of Mr. Sutton his career for the past few years is believed to have been a dual one. While in his home at Algona he was a model husband and father, but on his trips about the state it is reported by the police that he lived with other women and carried on many questionable transactions.

It is claimed by the local police that in Des Moines the man swindled clothing dealers out of many hundreds of dollars.

Connected with many of Sutton's transactions was Mrs. Anna Matthews of Watertown, S. D., a traveling saleswoman for the medicine company of which Sutton was the head. Mrs. Matthews was arrested by the local detectives Saturday. At the time of her arrest she wore several articles of clothing which she said had been given to her by Sutton. These articles are believed to be the ones which Sutton obtained by forging the checks.

When Sutton went to the various stores from which he obtained the clothing, he stated that he wished some articles for his wife and daughters. Invariably, it is said, he presented a check for an amount considerably larger than the bill and got the change in cash.

When she was arrested by the detectives, Mrs. Matthews declared that for some time past she has been suspicious of Sutton. She asserted she was ignorant of the means employed by him to get the clothing which he presented to her. Chief Johnston stated that he thinks the woman innocent and released her.

It was through information furnished by the woman that the detectives were able to locate Sutton at Algona.

The body of Sutton was terribly mangled when discovered, being entirely cut in two. The remains were taken to his late residence. Sutton is survived by a wife and two daughters.

SHAW SCORES INSURGENCY

Former Secretary of the Treasury Champions Standpat Ideas in Chicago Speech.

Chicago, June 13.—Leslie M. Shaw, former secretary of the treasury, speaking before members of the Hawkeye Fellowship club here Saturday, scored the "insurgents" in the republican party, declared "standpat" ideas the only logical principles of government and stigmatized the south as ignorant on political questions.

Mr. Shaw's remarks regarding the south were given a dramatic twist when a southern born newspaper man who was reporting the address so far forgot himself that he shouted: "It isn't so."

"It is true," responded the former secretary as he reiterated his statements. "The south is the best place in the world in which to make a speech because the people are so ignorant of political questions. It is not their fault; the burden of the great struggle is still upon them. But for all that, nowhere is there greater ignorance nor greater eagerness to know."

Championing "standpat" methods of legislation, particularly in regard to the tariff law, Mr. Shaw said:

"The people can't make the tariff. It would be as wise to expect the stockholders to run a railroad."

Dedication Day a Holiday.

Des Moines, June 13—Mayor James R. Hanna has issued a proclamation declaring June 14 dedication day, a holiday.

LAND IN CANADA AN INVESTMENT

WORK IT, AND SECURE 20 PER CENT. ON THE EXPENDITURE.

Farm lands in Canada increased in value this Spring from fifteen to twenty per cent, and as a result of this increase thousands of those who have gone there within the past few years have had that much more value added to their holdings. There is proof here that as a field for investment there is nowhere to be found a more profitable one than in purchasing farm lands in Canada. And, as a field for occupation and working the farms there is nowhere on the continent where more satisfactory return is given. The crops are always sure and the prices are always good. With railroads entering and traversing all the settled parts, there are very few districts in which the farmer will be more than from ten to twelve miles from a railway station. Roads are good, and big loads are easily handled. The price of getting grain to the primary market is low on this account, and then in reaching the world's markets the railways have their rates controlled by the Government, and what may be considered a fair deal is certain. Good prices for all kinds of grain is the rule, and if the investor has made good money by the increased value given to his unworked land, it is not difficult to understand that the profit to the man who works his land is just that much more, and there will be no depreciation. The man who holds a free homestead of one hundred and sixty acres of land, which he got for $10 as an entry fee, has land which at its lowest estimate is worth $10 an acre—yes, $15 an acre—the moment he has completed his three years' residence duties. It will continue to increase in value until its earning power gives a reasonable interest on a certain sum. That is, if he takes off the land fifteen to twenty dollars per acre clear profit each year, his land is worth to him, at a fair rate of interest, $200 an acre. If he only realizes $10 an acre clear profit, it is worth $100 per acre. Now, thousands of farmers are duplicating these figures. The price of land in Canada to-day is much less than its realizing value. The fact that the fifty thousand Americans who went to Canada year before last were followed by one hundred thousand last year offers some evidence, and good evidence, too, that there is getting to be a pretty fair knowledge that money is to be made in Canada lands. As an investment money is to be made, but more by living upon the land, secured either by homestead or purchase. The one hundred thousand of last year will be one hundred and fifty thousand this year. These comprise people from every state in the Union, and it is just being realized the asset that awaits the homeseeker in Canada. The large numbers that have gone, though, makes no appreciable difference in the supply of land. There is still left vast quantities of the best of it. But the longer a delay is made in arriving at a decision, the price will advance proportionately, and the more desirable homesteads near the railway lines become more difficult to secure. The Government publishes interesting literature, which may be had on application to any of the agents whose offices are located at different points through the States, and they (the agents) will be pleased to assist in any way possible in the choice of location.

SYNOPSIS.

Thomas Ardmore and Henry Maine Griswold stumble upon intrigue when the governors of North and South Carolina are reported to have quarreled. Griswold allies himself with Barbara Osborne, daughter of the governor of South Carolina, while Ardmore espouses the cause of Jerry Dangerfield, daughter of the governor of North Carolina. These two young ladies are trying to fill the shoes of their fathers, while the latter are missing. Both states are in a turmoil over one Appleweight, an outlaw with great political influence. Unaware of each other's position, both Griswold and Ardmore set out to make the other prosecute Appleweight. Valuable papers in the Appleweight case are missing from the office of Gov. Osborne and Griswold places the theft at the door of the scheming attorney general. Ardmore charters a caboose and starts for the border to plan the arrest of Appleweight. Jerry meanwhile, is a guest at Ardsley. Ardmore's posse takes the field. Griswold, plotting to the same end as Ardmore, is also scouting the border with a posse. Ardmore's brother-in-law, the duke of Ballywinkle, offers to elope with Jerry.

CHAPTER XII.—Continued.

"Young man, I think I told you once before that your legs were altogether too active. I want you to light right out of here—skip!"

"Not for a million dollars. Our meeting is highly opportune, Cookie. It's not for me to fly in the face of Providence. I'm going to see what's doing down here."

"All right," replied Cooke. "Take it all in and enjoy yourself; but you're my prisoner."

"Oh, that will be all right! So long as I'm with you I can't lose out."

"March!" called Cooke, dropping behind; and thus the two came in a few minutes to the engine, the cars and the caboose. From the locomotive a slight smoke still trailed hazily upward.

Thomas Ardmore, coatless and hatless, sat on the caboose steps writing messages on a board pad, while a telegraph instrument clicked busily within. One of his men had qualified as operator and a pile of messages at his elbow testified to Ardmore's industry. Ardmore clutched in his left hand a message recently caught from the wire which he re-read from time to time with increasing satisfaction. It had been sent from Ardsley and ran:

I shall ride to-night on the road that leads south beyond the red bungalow, and on the bridle-path that climbs the ridge on the west, called Sunset Trail. A certain English gentleman will accompany me. It will be perfectly agreeable to me to come back alone. G. D.

Ardmore was still writing when Cooke stood beneath him under the caboose platform.

"I beg your pardon, Mr. Ardmore, but this is our first prisoner."

Ardmore signed a dispatch and then looked up and took the pipe from his mouth. Collins lifted his hat politely.

"Ah, Mr. Ardmore, you see I have taken advantage of your exceedingly kind invitation to look you up in North Carolina."

"He was looking for you very hard when I found him, Mr. Ardmore," interposed Cooke.

"Your appearance delights me," said Ardmore, extending his hand to the reporter. "It was nice of you to walk out here to find me. Wouldn't they put you up at the house?"

"Well, the fact is I didn't stop there. My paper sent me in this general direction on business, but I had every honorable intention of making you that visit after I finished my assignment. But Cookie here says I'm arrested."

"He's a dangerous character and can't be allowed to run loose in these parts. I'm going to tie him up," said Cooke.

"May I ask you, Mr. Collins, just what you are doing here?" inquired Ardmore.

"You may, and I'll bet a boiled goose that Cookie and I are on the same job."

"What are you looking for?" demanded Ardmore's chief of staff.

"It's a big story if I get it, and I have every intention of getting it," said Collins guardedly.

"Out with it!" commanded Ardmore.

"The fact is, then, that I'm looking for a person of importance."

"Go right on, please."

"And that person is the governor of North Carolina, who is mysteriously absent from Raleigh. He attended the Cotton Planters' convention in New Orleans. He got as far as Atlanta on his way home and then disappeared. I need not say to gentlemen of your intelligence that a lost governor is ripe fruit in my business, and I have reason to believe that for some purpose of his own the governor of North Carolina is hiding in this very neighborhood."

Cooke glanced at Ardmore for instructions, but the master of Ardsley preferred to keep the matter in his own hands.

"So you want to find the governor of North Carolina, do you? Well, you shall not be disappointed. You are too able and zealous to be wasted on journalism. I have a feeling that you are destined to higher things. Something told me when we met in Atlanta that fate had set up apart for each other. You came here, Collins, to look for the governor of North Carolina, and your wits and your argus-nose for news have served you well. You have found the governor of North Carolina: I am he!"

Collins had stood during this recital in the middle of the track, with his legs wide apart, calmly fanning himself with his hat; but as Ardmore proceeded the reporter's hand dropped to his side, and a grin that had overspread his face slowly yielded to a blank stare.

"Would you mind repeating those last words?"

"I am the governor of North Carolina, Mr. Collins. The manner in which I attained that high office is not important. It must suffice that I am in sole charge of the affairs of this great state, without relief from valuation or appraisement laws, and without benefit of clergy. And we have much to do here; mere social conversation must await an ampler time. I now appoint you publicity agent to the governor. Your business is to keep the people fooled—all the people all the time. You will begin by sending out word that Gov. Dangerfield has given up all other work at present but the destruction of the Appleweight gang."

The Blood Surged Hotly Through His Heart.

"But by the ghost of John C. Calhoun, don't you see that I'm losing the chance of my life in my own profession? There's a story in this that would put me to the top and carry me right into New York," and Collins glanced about for his suit-case, as though meditating flight.

"Your appointment has gone into effect," said Ardmore with finality, "and if you bolt you will be caught and made to walk the plank. And so far as your future is concerned, you shall have a newspaper of your own anywhere you please as soon as this war is over."

The three men adjourned to the caboose, where Ardmore told Collins all that it seemed necessary for the newspaper man to know; and within half an hour the new recruit had entered thoroughly into the spirit of the adventure, though his mirth occasionally got the better of him, and he bowed his head in his hands and surrendered himself to laughter. Thereafter, until the six o'clock supper was ready, he kept the operator occupied. He sent to the Palladium a thoroughly plausible story giving prominence to the Appleweight case and laying stress on Gov. Dangerfield's vigorous personality and high sense of official responsibility. He sent queries to leading journals everywhere, offering exclusive news of the rumored disappearance of North Carolina's governor.

Ardmore took Collins more fully into his confidence during the lingering twilight, and the reporter made many suggestions that were of real value. Meanwhile Cooke's men brought three horses from the depths of the forest and saddled them. Cooke entered the caboose for a final conference with Ardmore and a last look at the maps.

"Too bad," remarked the acting governor, "that we must wait until to-morrow night to pick up the Appleweights, but our present business is more important. It's time to move, Cooke."

They rode off in single file on the faintest of trails through the woods, Cooke leading and Ardmore and Collins following immediately behind him. The great host of summer stars thronged the sky, and the moon sent its soft effulgence across the night. They presently forded a noisy stream, and while they were seeking the trail again on the farther side an owl hooted a thousand yards up the creek, and while the line re-formed Cooke paused and listened. Then the owl's call was repeated farther off and so faintly that Cooke alone heard it. He laid his hand on Ardmore's rein.

"There's a foot-trail that leads along that creek, and it's very rough and difficult to follow. Half a mile from here there used to be a still, run by one of the Appleweights. We smashed it once, but no doubt they are operating again by this time. That hoot of the owl is a warning common among the pickets put out by these people. Wireless telegraphy isn't in it with them. Every Appleweight within 20 miles will know in half an hour how many there are of us and just what direction we are taking. We must not come back here to-night. We must put up on your place somewhere and let them think, if they will, we are guests of yours out for an evening ride."

"That's all right. Unless we complete this job in about two days my administration is a fizzle," said Ardmore, as they resumed their march through the forest. There was a wilder fling to the roll of the land now, but the underbrush was better cleared, and the trail had become a bridle-path that had known man's care.

"This is some of Paul's work," said Ardmore; "and if I am not very much mistaken we are on my land now and headed straight enough for the wagon-road that leads south beyond the red bungalow. These roads in here were planned to give variety, but I never before appreciated how complicated they are."

The path stretched away through the heavy forest, and they climbed to a ridge that commanded a wide region that lay bathed in silver moonlight, so softly luminous that it seemed of the stuff of shadows made light. Westward, a mile distant, lay Ardsley, only a little below the level of the bridge and touched with a faint purple as of spring twilight.

Ardmore sat his saddle, quietly contemplating the great house that struck him almost for the first time as imposing. He felt, too, a little heartache that he did not quite understand.

"We'd better be moving," suggested Cooke. "Look below there!"

Looking off from the ridge they saw a man and a woman riding along a strip of road from which the timber had been cut. The night was so still, the gray light so subdued, that the two figures moved as steadily and softly as shadow pictures on a screen.

The slow even motion of the riders was interrupted suddenly. The man, who was nearer the remote observers, had stopped and bent toward the woman as though to snatch her rein, when her horse threw up its head and fell back on its haunches. Then the woman struck the man a blow with her riding-crop, and galloped swiftly away along the white ribbon-like road. In the perfect night-silence it was like a scene of pantomime.

"That's all right!" cried Cooke. "Come along! We'll cut into that road at the bungalow."

They swung their horses away from the ridge and back into the bridle-path, which once more dipped sharply down into heavy timber, Cooke leading the way, and three of the best hunters known to the Ardsley stables flew down the clear but winding path. The incident which the trio had witnessed required no interpretation; the girl's blow and flight had translated it into language explicit enough.

Ardmore thanked his German forester a thousand times for the admirable bridle-path over which they galloped, with its certain footing beneath and clean sweep from the boughs above. The blood surged hotly through his heart, and he was angry for the first time in his life; but his head was cool, and the damp air of the forest flowing by tranquillized him into a new elation of spirit. Jerry Dangerfield was the dearest and noblest and bravest girl in the world—he knew that; and she was clever and resourceful enough to devise means for preserving her father's official and private honor; and not less quick to defend herself from insult from a titled scoundrel.

The three men rode out into the broad highway at the red bungalow and paused to listen.

"He hasn't got here yet. Only one person has passed and these must be the tracks of the girl's horse," said Cooke, who had dismounted and struck matches, the better to observe the faint hoof-prints in the hard shell road.

"He'll be along in a minute. Let us got into the shadow of the bungalow, and when he comes we'll ride out and nail him. The bungalow's a sort of way house. I often stop here when I'm out on the estate and want to rest. I have the key in my pocket."

As Ardmore's keys jingled in the lock Cooke cried out softly. Their quarry was riding swiftly toward them, and he drew rein before the bungalow as Cooke and Collins rode out to meet him.

"I say," panted the duke.

"You are our prisoner. Dismount and come into this house."

St. Thomas of Canterbury.

The festival of St. Thomas of Canterbury, from being perhaps the most popular of saints' days in England, has now fallen into complete desuetude, and its revival is not aadvocated by even the most fervent of Anglo-Catholics. It was Henry VIII, who destroyed the Becket tradition. The king was (as always) in need of money, and the shrine of St. Thomas in Canterbury Cathedral seemed a suitable object for legalized loot. So in 1538 an order was issued that the bones of the saint should be burned and the offerings made at his shrine—the trophies of three centuries and a half—forfeited to the crown. Becket was to be decanonized, his images to be destroyed and his name erased from the service books. The work was faithfully performed. "The name of Geta," writes Dean Staanley, "has not been more carefully erased by his rival brother on every monument of the Roman Empire."

Stage Superstition.

An umbrella opened on the stage is supposed to bring bad luck, and many actors would hesitate about wearing new shoes on the first night of a play. The evil effects of new shoes are said, however, to be averted by wearing them on the wrong feet; in fact, any player who makes this mistake in the hurry of dressing regards it as a good omen not to be disturbed. Whistling on the stage during rehearsals is believed to insure a frost on the night of production, and in operatic circles a yellow clarinet in the orchestra is held to bring the same dire result.

Short, and to the Point.

One of the shortest speeches recorded in forensic annals is that of Taunton, afterward a judge. Charles Philips, an Irish orator, had made a flowery speech in an assault case. Taunton, who was for the defendant, said in reply: "My friend's eloquent complaint amounts, in plain English, to this: That his client has received a good, sound horsewhipping; and my defense is as short—that he richly deserved it."

It is not so much what we do as what we are that tells in this world.—Home Chat.

AT A CRITICAL PERIOD

Of Peculiar Interest to Women.

Mrs. Mary I. Remington, Eigleberry St., Gilroy, Cal., says: "I suffered so severely from pain and soreness over the kidneys that it was a task for me to turn over in bed. My kidneys acted very frequently, but the secretions were retarded and the passages scalded. I was weak and run down. After taking other remedies without benefit, I began using Doan's Kidney Pills and was permanently cured. I was going through the critical period of a woman's life at that time and after using Doan's Kidney Pills there was a miraculous change for the better in my health."

For Proper Care of Tuberculosis.

According to the National Association for the Study and Prevention of Tuberculosis, New York state leads in the number of beds for consumptives provided up to May 1, with 5,476 beds; Massachusetts is second with 2,403 beds; Pennsylvania, third, with 2,347 beds; Colorado, fourth, with 1,489 beds; and New Mexico fifth, with 1,104 beds. As yet, not one state in the country has made adequate provision for its consumptives. New York has set itself the task of having "No uncared-for tuberculosis in 1915," and several cities in other parts of the country have adopted similar programs. The national association says that tuberculosis will not be stamped out until all cases of this disease are cared for either in their homes or in institutions. With this end in view, efforts will be made to increase the number of hospital beds in this country to at least 35,000 by May 1, 1911.

Children.

Listen to this opinion from David Starr Jordan:

"There is nothing in all the world so important as children, nothing so interesting. If you ever wish to go in for some philanthropy, if you ever wish to be of any real use in the world, do something for children. If you ever yearn to be truly wise, study children. We can dress the sore, bandage the wounded, imprison the criminal, heal the sick and bury the dead, but there is always a chance that we can save a child. If the great army of philanthropists ever exterminate sin and pestilence, ever work out our race's salvation, it will be because a little child has led them."—Nautilus.

An Embryo Emancipator.

A little miss riding on a Brooklyn trolley car the other day tendered the conductor half fare. "How old are you, little girl?" he queried, gingerly handling her fare.

She pursed her lips for a moment, then calmly opened her purse, dropped two more pennies into the conductor's extended palm, snapped her purse and demurely replied: "You have your fare, sir; my statistics are my own!"

A DOCTOR'S EXPERIENCE

Medicine Not Needed in This Case.

It is hard to convince some people that coffee does them an injury! They lay their bad feelings to almost every cause but the true and unsuspected one.

But the doctor knows. His wide experience has proven to him that to some systems, coffee is an insidious poison that undermines the health.

Ask the doctor if coffee is the cause of constipation, stomach and nervous trouble.

"I have been a coffee drinker all my life. I am now 42 years old and when taken sick two years ago with nervous prostration, the doctor said that my nervous system was broken down and that I would have to give up coffee.

"I got so weak and shaky I could not work, and reading your advertisement of Postum, I asked my grocer if he had any of it. He said: 'Yes,' and that he used it in his family, and it was all it claimed to be.

"So I quit coffee and commenced to use Postum steadily and found in about two weeks' time I could sleep soundly at night and get up in the morning feeling fresh. In about two months I began to gain flesh. I weighed only 146 pounds when I commenced on Postum, and now I weigh 167 and feel better than I did at 20 years of age.

"I am working every day and sleep well at night. My two children were great coffee drinkers, but they have not drank any since Postum came into the house, and are far more healthy than they were before."

Read "The Road to Wellville," found in pkgs. "There's a reason."

LOU AND JESSIE.

By M. QUAD.

[Copyright, 1910, by Associated Literary Press.]

Mrs. Spencer had dropped in on the bride of four months. She had had her eye on young Mrs. Gray for some time and was now prepared to shatter her idol.

After observing that there were five cases of married couples separating recorded in the paper this morning she went on to add that the way husbands were carrying on these days was something perfectly awful.

"I never read about those things," replied the young wife. "Of course there are good and bad husbands, but my Billy is one of the very best."

"Y-e-s," said Mrs. Spencer grudgingly and with a look of pity in her eyes. "I thought my husband was almost an angel for several years, and then he was arrested for having five wives."

"But Billy is different, you know."

"Perhaps. On Monday I was in the telephone booth at Calder's drug store to talk with my daughter. It's a double booth, you know. Just as I was ready to ring up, your husband entered the other booth and called up a young woman and had a conversation with her."

"But he didn't say anything to me about it," replied the wife. "What name did he call the lady by?"

"There were two of them before he got through, and he called them Lou and Jessie. He said he'd have more money for them soon. Mrs. Gray, don't go on deceiving yourself as I did."

"But—but I don't think he knows any ladies by those names," faltered the wife as her eyes filled with tears.

"You mean he hasn't told you that he does. Of course not. My husband didn't tell me that he had four other wives. Husbands are sleek, slick and sly. You have got to be crafty to find them out. However, if you want to sit here and do nothing I've no objections."

"But what can I do? I don't know who Lou and Jessie are."

"What can you do? You can be in the telephone booth at noon today; you can hear him talk; you can get sight of him; you can go home and pack your trunk; you can stand right up to him and tell him that his perfidy is discovered."

At noon young Mrs. Gray was in one of the telephone booths at Calder's. Up to the moment she started from home she had said to herself that she wouldn't go.

She had been waiting in the booth only five minutes when a step she knew entered the store. Then some one sat down in the other booth. Her heart was throbbing as central was rung up and a voice called:

"Give me 2043 Jackson."

The number went down on a slip of paper in the booth at the man's back.

"Hello! Is that you, old man? Well, how are Lou and Jessie today? I didn't sleep two hours last night for thinking of 'em. Haven't moved yet, eh? Oh, no, I'm not going to throw up my hands. I'll send you a check by messenger at 1 o'clock. I picked Lou and Jessie, and I'm going to stand by 'em. Goodby."

At the usual hour of 6 o'clock Billy Gray came home whistling. He was happy, also hungry, also longing for the kiss that always greeted him. He entered the sitting room to find a woman seated on a trunk.

She had her hat on, and some things she had failed to find room for in the trunk were piled on a chair. The woman was his wife, and she looked up at him with a cold stare.

"Is it you, Ruby? Good lands, but what does this mean? Is your mother dead?"

"Stand back, sir!" she replied as she motioned him off. "I am neither Lou nor Jessie!"

"But what is it? You are pale. You have been crying. You have packed your trunk. Tell me what has happened."

"Sir," she said as she rose from the trunk and extended a piece of paper, "here are the proofs. I don't think you'll want to ask any further questions."

"No. 2043 Jackson," he read and then asked:

"But what is it? What does this mean?"

"It means Lou and Jessie, sir! I was right there in the telephone booth this noon when you conversed with them. You picked Lou and Jessie and you'll stand by them! Will you have the kindness to get me and my trunk to the depot? I am going to mother. If you think Lou and Jessie will object I can find a cab myself."

Billy didn't rush forward and try to throw his arms around her. He didn't try to explain. He simply got down on the floor and laughed and rolled over and kicked about until the stern faced wife wondered if the sudden blow had taken away his reason. She had almost decided to send for a doctor when he got a hold on himself and rose up and pulled her down on the trunk beside him and said:

"No. 2043 Jackson is the office of a stockbroker. I can bring you the telephone book and show you. Lou and Jessie are the names of two copper mines I am interested in. The broker is carrying me on a margin. The stock is dull and down, and I've lost a bit, but I am hoping for a rise and hanging on. Here's a circular telling all about the Lou and Jessie and several other mines."

"And you—you"—

Now that Teddy is back with his big stick, we suppose all things will run smoothly again.

"A good husband is one who feels in his coat pocket every time he passes a mail box," says an exchange.

It is a well established rule of economics that the young man who ri-es with the sun should not stay up later than 10 o'clock with the daughter.

The primary law may be all right, but how many men went into the booth last Tuesday that knew the qualifications of the men for whom they were voting? True, some of these men had received personal letters from the candidates who extolled their own qualifications but that appears to have been about the only information obtainable. Few knew whether they were voting for progressives or standpatters, outside of the county officers and for governor. Some may say that all men read, but will this same man state where the reader had an opportunity to read about these men. Where or what paper published all the biographies of the candidates or even mentioned their names, even though they were published, what per cent of the readers take the papers containing the biographies? The writer with all his exchanges, has failed to see anything of the kind. It is a safe prediction that one-half the men voting made a cross before the first name on the ballot.—State Line Herald.

If you are not satisfied after using according to directions two-thirds of a bottle of Chamberlain's Stomach and Liver Tablets, you can have your money back. Talk of New Railroad

Forest City is surely in line for a new railroad to extend eastward during the coming summer. Last week articles of incorporation were filed with the Secretary of State of South Dakota for the Forest City, Fertile & Mason City Railroad Company, with headquarters at Watertown, S. D.

The new company is capitalized at $400,000 and the incorporators of the company are P. O. Koto, C. N. Christopherson, C. A. Isaacs, all of Forest City; A. M. Sheima of Baldwin, Wis., A. L. Sherin and M. J. Hawley, of Waterville, S. D.

The line of road will run from Forest City east to Fertile, thence southeast to Mason City, a distance of thirty miles, in the counties of Winnebago, Hancock, Worth and Cerro Gordo.

M. J. Hawley, the prime mover in the corporation, is an organizer and promoter of no small ability, having engineered several railroad propositions successfully in his home state, South Dakota, and he has been in Forest City off and on for several weeks looking after the interest of the new corporation. Right of ways are being secured, surveys made and indications are that running cars will be in operation ere we see another spring.

One thing can be banked upon and that is that with the Rock Island maneuvering hereabouts as it has been in the past few years, and this new corporation taking up the matter Forest City is assured of an extension of some kind into the eastern territory in the near future.—Summit.

Successful Sunday Journalism

For several years the newspaper readers of the West have watched with interest the unique experiment embodied in the Sunday Magazine of The Chicago Record-Herald. The time has now come when it is no longer an experiment, but a sound and prospering success. Nothing else of the kind in newspaperdom can compare for a moment with this remarkable supplement.

The Sunday Magazine of the Record-Herald is a real magazine, full of stories and articles by the best living writers, illustrated by eminent artists and carrying on its cover each week a masterpiece of color work. Its prestige is now such that it can compete with the big monthlies for the most costly fiction in the market, sometimes paying as high as $25,000 for a single serial, as it did for Conan Doyle's "Sir Nigel." It captured Anthony Hope's "Sophy of Kravonia" when every other magazine in the country wanted the story. The most popular tales of humor now appearing in the United States—those of the inimitable Shorty McCabe—have been published exclusively in the Sunday Magazine of the Record-Herald from the start.

Its high literary quality has been steadily maintained and has "won out." You will find one of the best novels of the day running serially in its columns at the present moment. It is not strange that hundreds of thousands of readers prefer the Sunday Record-Herald to all other papers.

"It cured me" or "It saved the life of my child," are the expressions you hear every day about Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhoea Remedy. This is true the world over where this valuable remedy has been introduced. No other medicine in use for diarrhoea or bowel complaints has received such general approval. The secret of the success of Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhoea Remedy is that it cures. Sold by all dealers.

GENERAL NEWS.

H. J. C. Beckemeyer of Carlyle, member of the Illinois legislature, took the witness stand in the trial of Lee O'Neil Browne at Chicago and testified before the jury that he had been paid $1,000 for his vote for William Lorimer for United States senator. He said Browne paid him the money in $50 bills in a room of the Southern hotel, to which he came on June 21, 1909, by direction of Browne, to receive "a package."

Representtive Michael S. Link, author of confession No. 3 in the Lorimer bribery scandal, took the witness stand in the Browne trial and told that, with White and Beckemeyer, he had voted for Lorimer and received $1,000 from Browne. He elated the defense by saying no money had been promised him for his vote and no explanation made when it was paid.

The charges of bribery with the election of William Lorimer to the United States senate will be investigated by the committee on privileges and elections of that body. This action was assured when the committee met at the call of Chairman Burrows.

GUY BAKER ON TRIAL

Charged with Slaying of Oliver Driver of Lone Tree

STATE SCORES FIRST POINT

Shown That Driver Came to His Death From a Fracture of the Skull Inflicted Shortly Before He Died.

Iowa City, Ia., June 20.—The state scored the first point in the preliminary hearing of Guy Baker, charged with the murder of Oliver P. Driver of Lone Tree by striking him upon the head with a board.

It was shown by the testimony of Dr. Henry Albert that Driver came to his death from a fracture of the skull inflicted shortly before he died, and not from a kick from a mule three or four weeks previously, as the defense contended. Dr. Albert found the mark made by the mule, but it was on the point of the chin.

He testified that death was the result of a fracture over the left ear, produced by a blunt instrument which did not break the skin. Paralysis of the right side followed, and Mr. Driver died a few hours later. The skull was exhibited in court.

The defendant, Baker, killed a man in Muscatine some years ago, during an altercation which arose over Baker's going driving with a sister of the other man. He was acquitted on the grounds of self defense, claiming that several men jumped to the horse and he thought that he was about to be attacked.

Baker's father is a wealthy farmer of Muscatine county and is supplying the funds to defend his son. Feeling runs quite high over the affair in Lone Tree.

NEGRO CHOKES LITTLE GIRL

Ada Miles Choked Into Insensibility, But Her Struggles Brought Her Assistance.

Des Moines, June 20.—Frustrated in his attempt to assault 15-year-old Ada Miles, a waitress at the home of Mrs. E. W. Earnest, 414 Chestnut street, by the desperate fight put up by the little girl, a negro choked the girl until she was insensible and then escaped when he heard inmates of the house approaching. The negro has not yet been apprehended.

Miss Miles has a room on the top floor of the Earnest home where she has been a waitress for the past week. Saturday night at about 12 o'clock the girl went upstairs to go to bed. Because of the heat she did not light the gas when she entered her room.

A moment later she heard a slight noise from behind her. Before she could turn her head someone grasped her about the throat and ordered her to lie still. Frantically she caught up one of her shoes and attempted to strike the man over the head. She struggled furiously and was fast sinking into unconsciousness when Mrs. Earnest and others in the house started to her assistance. Then the girl fainted.

SYNOPSIS.

Thomas Ardmore and Henry Maine Griswold stumble upon intrigue when the governors of North and South Carolina are reported to have quarreled. Griswold busies himself with Barbara Osborne, daughter of the governor of South Carolina, while Ardmore espouses the cause of Jerry Dangerfield, daughter of the governor of North Carolina. These two young ladies are trying to fill the shoes of their fathers while the latter are missing. Both states are in a turmoil over Bill Appleweight, an outlaw with great political influence. Unaware of each other's position, both Griswold and Ardmore plot to make the other prosecute Appleweight. Ardmore organizes a big hunt. Griswold also takes the field. Frank Collins, Atlanta reporter, is arrested by Ardmore, but released to become press agent of the young millionaire's expedition.

"Prisoner, you fool! I'm a guest at Ardsley and I'm looking for a lady."

"That's a very unlikely story. Collins, help the gentleman down;" and the reporter obeyed instructions with much zeal that the noble gentleman fell prone, and was assisted to his feet with a fine mockery of helpfulness.

"I tell you I'm looking for a lady whose horse ran away with her! I'm the duke of Ballywinkle and brother-in-law to Mr. Ardmore. I'll have you put to jail if you stop me here."

"Come along, duke, and we'll see what you look like," said Cooke, leading the way to the bungalow veranda. Ardmore was lighting lamps. There was a long room finished in black oak, with a fireplace at one end, and a table in the center. The floors were covered with handsome rugs and the walls were hung with photographs and etchings. Ardmore sat on the back of a leather settee in a pose assumed at the moment of the duke's entrance. It was a pose of extreme nonchalance, and Ardmore's cap, perched on the back of his head, and his brown hair rumpled boyishly, added to the general effect of comfort and ease.

The duke blinked for a moment in the lamplight, then he roared out joyously:

"Ardy, old man!" and advanced toward his brother-in-law with outstretched hand.

"Keep him off; he's undoubtedly quite mad," said Ardmore, staring coldly, and bending his riding-crop across his knees. "Collins, please ride on after the lady and bring her back this way."

Cooke had seated the prisoner rather rudely in a chair, and the noble duke, having lost the power of speech from amazement and fright, rubbed his eyes and then fastened them incredulously on Ardmore; but there was no question about it, he had been insulted with violence; he had been repudiated by his own brother-in-law as the useless, stupid Tommy Ardmore, who, at best, had only a child's mind for pirate stories and who was indubitably the most negligible of negligible figures in the drama of life as the duke knew it.

"Cooke," began Ardmore, addressing his lieutenant gravely from his perch on the settee, "what is the charge against this person?"

"He says he's a duke," grinned Cooke, taking his cue from Ardmore's manner. "And he says he's visiting Ardsley."

"That," said Ardmore with decision, is creditable only to the gentleman's romantic imagination. His face is anything but dukely, and there's a red streak across it which points clearly to the recent sharp blow of a weapon; and no one would ever strike a duke. It is utterly incredible," and Ardmore raised his brows and leaned back with his arms at length and his hands grasping the riding-crop, as he contemplated with supreme satisfaction the tell-tale red line across the duke's cheek.

"For God's sake, Ardy—" howled the duke.

"Cooke," he said, half to himself as he turned the pages, "do you remember just what the constitution says about dukes? Oh, yes; here we are! Now, Mr. Duke of Ballywinkle, listen to what it says here in Section 9 of the Constitution of the United States, which reads exactly as follows in this book: 'No title of nobility shall be granted by the United States: And no person holding any office of profit or trust under them, shall, without the consent of the congress, accept of any present, emolument, office, or title, of any kind whatever, from any king, prince, or foreign state.' And it says in Section 10 that 'No state shall grant any title of nobility.' Now, Mr. Ballywinkle, it is perfectly clear that this government can't recognize anything that it can't create, for that would be foolish. As I, the governor of North Carolina, can't make a duke, I can't see one. You are therefore wholly illegal; it's against the most sacred law of the land for you to be here at all; and, painful though it is to me, it is nevertheless my duty to order you to leave the United States at once, never to return. In fact, if you ever appear in the United States again, I hereby order that you be hanged by the neck until you be dead. One of Mr. Cooke's men will accompany you to New York to-morrow and see to it that you take passage on a steamer bound for a British port. The crime of having insulted a woman will still hang over you until you are well east of Sandy Hook, and I advise you not to risk being tried on that charge in North Carolina, as my people are very impulsive and emotional, and lynchings are not infrequent in our midst. You shall spend to-night in my official caboose some distance from here, and your personal effects will be brought from Ardsley, where, you have said, you are a guest of Mr. Thomas Ardmore, who is officially unknown to me. The supreme court will now adjourn."

Cooke pulled the limp, bewildered duke to his feet, and dragged him from the bungalow.

As they stepped out on the veranda Collins rode up in alarm.

The Guide Pushed His Mule Forward at a Fast Walk.

"I followed this road to a cross-road where it became a bridle-path and runs off into the forest. There I lost all trace of the lady, but here is her riding-crop."

"Cooke, take your prisoner to the caboose; and Collins, come with me," commanded Ardmore; and a moment later he and the reporter rode off furiously in search of Jerry Dangerfield.

CHAPTER XIII.

Miss Dangerfield Takes a Prisoner.

A dozen men carrying rifles across their saddle-bows rode away from Habersham's farm on the outskirts of Turner Court House and struck a rough trail that led a devious course over the hills. At their head rode the guide of the expedition—a long silent man on a mule. Griswold and Habersham followed immediately behind him on horseback. Their plans had been carefully arranged before they left their rendezvous, and save for an occasional brief interchange between the prosecuting attorney and the governor's special representative, the party jogged on in silence. Habersham's recruits were, it may be said, farmers of the border, who had awaited for years just such an opportunity as now offered to avenge themselves upon the insolent Appleweights. Nearly every man of the party had some private score to settle, but they had all been sworn as special constables and were sobered by the knowledge that the power of the state of South Carolina was back of them.

Thus, at the very hour that Mr. Ardmore and his lieutenant rode away from the lonely anchorage of the caboose, Prof. Griswold and his cavalcade set out for Mount Nebo church. When the master of Ardsley was revenging himself upon the duke of Ballywinkle, his dearest friend, against whom he had closed the doors of his house, was losing no time in setting forth upon a mission which, if successful, would seriously interfere with all Mr. Ardmore's hopes and plans.

The guide of the expedition pushed his mule forward at a fast walk, making no excuses to Griswold and Habersham for the roughness of the trails he chose, nor troubling to give warning of sharp turns where a horse, being less wise than a mule, tobogganed madly before finding a foothold. Occasionally a low hanging limb switched the associate professor sharply across the face, but his temper continued serene where the trail was darkest and steepest, and he found himself ignoring Habersham's occasional polite questions about the university in his effort to summon up in memory certain ways of Barbara Osborne which baffled him.

"Check up, cain't you?" snarled the man on the mule, laying hold of Griswold's rein; and thus halted, Griswold found that they had been circling round a curiously symmetrical, thickly wooded hill, and had finally come to a clearing whence they were able to gaze far off toward the north.

"We are almost out of bounds," said Habersham, pointing. "Over there somewhere, across the hills, lies North Carolina. I am as thoroughly lost as you can possibly be; but these men know where they are. How far is it, Billy"—he addressed the silent guide—"to Mount Nebo?"

"About four mile, and I reckon we'd better let out a lettle now or they'll sing the doxology before we git thar."

"What's that light away off there?" asked Habersham.

The guide paused to examine, and the faint glow far down the vale seemed to perplex him. He spoke to one or two other natives and they viewed the light ruminatively, as is their way.

"Thet must be on Ardmore's land," said the leader finally. "It shoots out all sorts o' ways round hyeh, and I reckon thet's wheh Raccoon creek cuts through."

"That's very likely," said Habersham. "I've seen the plat of what Ardmore owns on this side the border at the courthouse, and I remember that there's a long strip in Mingo county that is Ardsley land. Ardmore has houses of one kind and another scattered all over the estate and those lights may be from one of them. You know the place, don't you?"

"Yes; I've visited there," admitted Griswold. "But we'd better give it a wide berth. The whole estate is simply infested with scarlet fever. They're quarantined."

"I guess that's a joke," said Habersham. "There's a big party on there now, and I have seen some of the guests in Turner's within a day or two."

"Within how many days?" demanded Griswold, his heart sinking at the thought that Ardmore had lied to him to keep him away from Ardsley—from Ardmore's house! The thought of it really hurt him now.

"Come on!" called Habersham.

Half the company rode ahead to gain the farther side of the church; the remainder, including Griswold and Habersham, soon dismounted and tied their horses out of sight of the country road which they had latterly been following.

"We are in plenty of time," said Habersham, looking at his watch. "The rest of the boys are closing in from the other side and they will be ready for Appleweight when he finishes his devotions. We've been studying the old man's habits and he has a particular place where he ties his horse back of the church. It's a little apart from the fence where most of the congregation hitch, and he chose it, no doubt, because in case of a surprise he would have plenty of room for maneuvering. Two men are going to lay for him, seize and gag him and carry him into the wood back of the church; and then we're off across the state line to lock him up in jail at Kildare and give Gov. Dangerfield the shock of his life."

"It sounds simple enough; but it won't be long before Appleweight's friends miss him. You must remember that they are a shrewd lot."

"We've got to take our chances. Let's hope we are as shrewd as they are," replied Habersham.

They moved softly through the wood and presently the faint sound of singing reached them.

"Old Rabdick has finished his sermon and we'll know the worst in a few minutes."

One of the party had already detached himself and crept forward toward the chuch, to meet his appointed comrade in the enterprise, who was to come in from the other side.

The clapboard church presented in the moonlight the austerest outlines, and as the men waited, a rude though unseen hand was slamming the wooden shutters that protected the windows from impious violence.

"We could do with less moon," muttered Habersham, as he and Griswold peered through the trees into the churchyard.

"There goes Bill Appleweight now," whispered one of the natives at his elbow, and Griswold felt his heartbeats quicken as he watched a tall figure silhouetted against the church and moving swiftly toward the rear of the building. At the front of the church voices sounded, as the departing worshipers rode or drove slowly away.

Habersham laid his hand suddenly on Griswold's arm.

"They've got him! They've nailed him! See! There! They're yanking him back into the timber. They've taken him and his horse!"

Griswold saw nothing but a momentary confusion of shadows, then perfect silence hung over the woods behind the little church. The congregation was slowly dispersing, riding away in little groups. Suddenly a voice called out in the road 100 yards beyond the church:

"Hey, there! Where's Bill?"

"Oh, he's gone long ago!" yelled another.

In a moment more the church door slammed and a last figure rode rapidly away.

A Church in a Rock.

In the quaint old German town of Oberstein an ancient church stands, built in the great rock rising from the river. The front of the building is of stone, but the church itself is hollowed out of the rock and penetrates far into its heart. Tradition says that in the fourteenth century the count of Oberstein, one of the old robber barons, fell deeply in love with a beautiful young lady, the daughter of a neighboring knight.

His brother also sought the fair maiden's hand and the two suitors had a violent quarrel. The upshot was that the count flung his hapless brother from the top of his castle wall high up the precipitous cliff. Repenting of his awful deed, the count vowed that he would build a church where his brother's body first touched the ground. He did so, excavating the church in the rock; and tradition goes on to say a miraculous spring of clear water sprang from the crag as a token that heaven was appeased. This curious church is now the only Protestant place of worship in the town.—Wide World Magazine.

Gladstone's Memory.

Gladstone's power of memory was always one of his greatest assets. In his last years he often lamented that it was not what it had been; but even so, it came triumphantly out of some remarkable tests. In his eighty-third year he set himself to recall Manzoni's ode on the death of Napoleon, which, as a young man, he had translated into English. He had entirely forgotten his own version, but by dint of hard "digging" or "fishing up," as he called it, he wrote down 104 of the 108 Italian lines. Two years later he essayed to write from memory a complete list of all the men who had been his cabinet colleagues, and enumerated 60 of the 70.

A USEFUL QUALITY.

"This watch of mine is absolutely waterproof."

"That is a great idea. It will not hurt the works when you 'soak' it.."

IN A SERIOUS CONDITION.

A Case of Terrible Kidney Trouble.

Henry Palmer, Cole and Walnut Sts., Barnesville, O., says: "My kidney trouble was caused by hardships and exposure in the army. The awful pains across my back gradually became more severe until I was in constant misery. My feet and hands were swollen to twice their natural size. The kidney secretions were in a terrible condition—for months I voided what seemed to be clear blood. I became so dizzy everything seemed to whirl. My condition was alarming when I began using Doan's Kidney Pills. Before long I improved and was soon strong and well."

Remember the name—Doan's.

Didn't Know the Purpose.

Mark Twain, as an example of unconscious humor, used to quote a Hartford woman who said one day in the late spring:

"My husband is the dearest fellow. 'Jim,' I said to him this morning, 'are you very hard up just now?'

"'I certainly am hard up,' he replied soberly. 'This high cost of living is terrible. I don't know what I'm going to do.'

"'Then, Jim,' said I, 'I'll give up all thought of going to the country for July and August this year.'

"But the dear fellow's face changed, and he said:

"'Indeed, then, you won't, darling. I thought you wanted to buy a hat with an aigrette or some such foolishness. No, no, my darling—Jim can always find the money to let his dear little wife go to the country.'"

Soothing.

"But those extremely violent women lunatics—how do you manage to keep them so quiet?"

"That's an idea of the new superintendent's."

"Yes?"

"Yes; he had the straightjackets made up in the peek-a-boo style."—Puck.

Another Simile.

"What did the sun look like to you when you were in the arctic regions?"

"Well," answered the explorer, thoughtfully, "it resembled an elusive gold dollar much magnified."

Not Prepared to See.

Marjorie—Didn't you see the mouse?

Madge—Why, dear, I just couldn't see it. I had my old stockings on.

A DETERMINED WOMAN

Finally Found a Food That Cured Her.

"When I first read of the remarkable effects of Grape-Nuts food, I determined to secure some," says a woman in Salisbury, Mo. "At that time there was none kept in this town, but my husband ordered some from a Chicago traveler.

"I had been greatly afflicted with sudden attacks of cramps, nausea, and vomiting. Tried all sorts of remedies and physicians, but obtained only temporary relief. As soon as I began to use the new food the cramps disappeared and have never returned.

"My old attacks of sick stomach were a little slower to yield, but by continuing the food, that trouble has disappeared entirely. I am today perfectly well, can eat anything and everything I wish, without paying the penalty that I used to. We would not keep house without Grape-Nuts.

"My husband was so delighted with the benefits I received that he has been recommending Grape-Nuts to his customers and has built up a very large trade on the food. He sells them by the case to many of the leading physicians of the county, who recommend Grape-Nuts very generally. There is some satisfaction in using a really scientifically prepared food."

BAD FIRE AT MESERVEY

J. F. Hartfelder was over from Meservey yesterday and he reports that on Tuesday afternoon his meat market building at Meservey was burned to the ground, together with two other buildings. Practically all the butcher tools and machinery were saved. The town has no fire protection and it was lucky that the whole business section of the town was not burned. The Meservey men, women and children all worked hard with buckets and did what they could to save the town. The cause of the fire is unknown. Mr. Hartfelder's loss is near $1500, with $500 insurance.

CHINA'S GREAT WALL.

It Would Be a Mighty Task to Duplicate It Today.

What man has done, we are told, man can do. But to erect today a great fortification comparable to the Great wall of China would be a heavy tax on both the resources and the resolution of Europe. A score or two of warships are all very well, but the cost of labor and the will involved in building fleets can hardly be compared to those devoted to the building of that great barrier about two centuries before the coming of Christ, when Rome was struggling with Hannibal.

Two thousand five hundred and fifty miles, including spurs, arms and loops, is the length ascribed to it by Dr. W. E. Geil, the only white man, we believe, who has traveled the whole length of it. It has been said that the Great wall is the only object of man's handiwork which could be discerned from the moon, and one calculation has it that if the material of the wall were disposed about the globe at the equator there would be a wall girdle eight feet high and three feet thick around the earth.

One can believe that to this day the name of the Emperor Chin is cursed all along the wall by the posterity of the wretches who were forced to the gigantic task of building it. In the days of its greatest importance, when it was still holding back the Tartar hordes, it is believed to have had on its line 25,000 towers, each capable of holding 100 men, and 15,000 watchtowers. Even today there remains 20,000 towers and 10,000 watchtowers, with some 2,000 miles of wall that could, with moderate repairing, be made into a formidable military work.—London News.

Giants and Dwarfs.

In the seventeenth century all the abnormally large and small folks of Austria were assembled in Vienna in response to a whim of the empress. As circumstances required that all should be housed in one building, there was a fear that the imposing proportions of the giants would terrify the dwarfs. But the dwarfs teased and tormented the giants so that these overgrown mortals complained with tears in their eyes, and as a consequence sentinels had to be placed to protect the giants from their pygmy persecutors, for the smallest men had the biggest brains and the longest tongues.

Corrupted His Style.

"The late Richard Watson Gilder," said a New York poet, "always opposed the reading of light literature. A poet, he said, could not read such literature without corrupting his literary style.

"He once told me that the poet in this respect was like Brown's parrot.

"Brown bought a parrot for $20 from a pet stock dealer and a week or two later returned to the shop and insisted that the bird be taken back.

"'What's the matter with it?' the dealer asked.

"'W-w-why,' said Brown, 'the durned c-c-critter st-stutters.'"

Expert Opinion.

"What do you think made Hamlet so suspicious of the ghost?" asked Mr. Stormington Barnes.

"He probably thought," answered the psychic researcher, "that no well regulated ghost would manifest himself without ringing bells or tipping tables."—Washington Star.

Putting Him Wise.

"I'd like to make you my wife," said the practical young man, "but they tell me you can't keep house."

"Don't you believe all they tell you," rejoined the girl in the case. "You get the house and put it in my name, and I'll prove to you that I can keep it."—Exchange.

Happily Wedded

A very pretty wedding occurred on Wednesday afternoon, June 22nd, at four o'clock, at the home of Mr. and Mrs. H. F. Ludeke, west of town, when their daughter, Sarah M., was united in the holy bonds of matrimony to Mr. Elmer W. Weisbrod. Rev. Wessel, of the Klemme German M. E. church, and Rev. Koerner of Reinbeck, officiated. After the ceremony a sumptuous repast was served.

These popular and deserving young people start out in life with very bright prospects and with the best wishes of a large circle of admiring friends. We believe that both parties are well known here. The bride is the accomplished daughter of Mr, and Mrs. H. F. Ludeke, old settlers in this community, and she has grown to young womanhood here, where she has a host of friends. She has been very popular in social and church circles and will be greatly missed in the church here. The groom is a Fenton young man, and is spoken of very highly by those who know him, as a young man of good character and much ability. NO HELP NEEDED, THANK YOU!

But Many Will Think Women Needed a Course of Instruction in Manners.

"It's all off with me, this thing of offering help to women autoists in distress," says Charles A. Gager, the optician.

"I was walking up Superior avenue a day or two ago, when I noticed a stalled auto in front of the Colonial theater. Two women, both apparently exhausted, were making a desperate effort to 'crank' the machine.

"Being somewhat familiar with automobiles, I lifted my hat and approached the pair.

"'Ladies,' I asked, 'can I be of some service?'

"'Yes, you can,' snapped one of the women, 'you can go right along and mind your own darn business.'"—Cleveland Leader.

Lazy William.

"You are advertising for a chauffeur, I see, Mrs. De Payste."

"Yes, we had to let William go last week."

"I thought you were well pleased with him."

"At first we were, but a new broom sweeps clean, you know, and we found that William was lazy. He was fine at washing the windows, spading the garden, pumping the vacuum cleaner, mowing the lawn, tending the furnace, running errands, pressing clothes, sweeping the walks, polishing the floors, oiling the furniture, preparing the vegetables, waiting on table and doing the dishes. But he was lazy. He used to go to sleep at midnight regularly, no matter where he was. Many a time Mr. De Payste has left the club for home at two o'clock in the morning and found William snoring in the car outside. Imagine how it must have looked to our friends to see our chauffeur asleep in the street!"

A Tart Tongue.

Col. Robert C. Carter, at a Nashville banquet, was talking about campaign comrades.

"Then there was Dash of Company A," he said. "Dash had the reputation of being the nastiest-tongued man in the regiment.

"It was Private Dash, you know, who, out foraging one evening on a rich estate, came accidentally upon the owner's wife, a grande dame in evening dress.

"Dash asked her for food. She refused him. He asked again. But, still refusing, she walked away.

"'No,' she said, 'I'll give you nothing, trespassing like this! I'll give you nothing. My mind is made up.'

"'Made up, is it?' said Dash. 'Like the rest of you, eh?'"

Right Name at Last.

"Let me show you our latest novelty," said the clerk in the haberdashery. "Here is the 'north pole' collar button. Named in honor of Cook and Peary."

"By Jove!" laughed the humorous customer. "They couldn't find a better name for a collar button."

"Why not?"

"Because it is so hard to locate."

Similarity.

Jack—No, they always remind me of a kiss through a telephone.

ROYAL WELCOME FOR ROOSEVELT

Vast Throng Greets the Former President at New York.

HE IS MET AT QUARANTINE

Escorted to the Battery by a Great Flotilla—Speeches and Land Parade—Affair Is Spontaneous and Non-Partisan.

New York.—He has come back!

Theodore Roosevelt returned to his native land June 18, and was given a welcome home such as was never before accorded to a citizen of this republic. The whole country joined in it, and it was so spontaneous and so utterly non-partisan that it could not but be most flattering to the former president.

Since emerging from the African jungle the latter part of March, Mr. Roosevelt has been the guest of nearly every European ruler and almost unprecedented honors have been heaped on him. The reception by his fellow citizens was a fitting climax to his triumphal tour and must have been the most satisfactory event connected with it.

Flotilla Meets Him at Quarantine.

More than a month ago every available craft in New York harbor had been engaged for the day, and numerous big organizations, like the Republican club of New York and the Hamilton club of Chicago, had chartered regular coast line steamers. Early in the morning this immense flotilla sailed far down the bay, and when, about 9 o'clock, the scouting tugs and motor boats came flying in with the word that the Kaiserin Auguste Victoria was approaching, all made ready for the first greeting.

As the big liner came into sight, every whistle on every vessel was tied open and shrieked the welcome to the returning wanderer. Colonel Roosevelt, with Mrs. Roosevelt and Kermit by his side, stood on the deck, waving his hand and smiling the familiar smile, and the waiting thousands cheered him again and again.

Reception Committee Takes Him.

At Quarantine the necessary formalities were quickly over and the official reception committee took the colonel and his party aboard its revenue cutter. That vessel at once started up the harbor and all the gaily decorated craft, filled with clubs and private parties, fell in behind and formed a most spectacular water parade. On almost every boat was a band, and all the way the musicians played at the top of their lungs. The shores were black with people who shouted their greetings to "Teddy" as he passed and the factories and mills added the noise of their whistles to the general din.

So it went all the way up to Twenty-third street, where the parade turned and made its way back to the Battery. At that historic spot at the lower end of Manhattan island Colonel Roosevelt landed to receive the formal welcome home.

Welcomed by Mayor Gaynor.

In an enclosure in the center of Battery park were 200 distinguished guests, including senators, representatives, ambassadors and close personal friends of Mr. Roosevelt. Surrounding this enclosure was another reserved space which was occupied by about 2,500 prominent men and members of the big reception committee.

The cheering and music were almost continuous as the colonel entered the park, but finally quiet was restored and Mayor Gaynor stepped forward and delivered a cordial address of welcome on behalf of the nation and the city. Mr. Roosevelt responded briefly but feelingly, and short speeches were made by several other prominent men. Much as he would have liked to be present to greet his predecessor, President Taft was kept away on account of his official position and by a previous engagement.

Parade Through the City.

When the speech making was over, the parade through the city streets started. It was originally intended to conclude the reception with a monster parade, and invitations were issued to various organizations throughout the country. Within a few days, however, the committee was flooded with so many applications that the parade feature had to be in part abandoned. Organizations from Maine to California and from the Gulf to the Great Lakes requested places in the line of march, and if the project had been carried out, the procession would have extended from the Battery to the Harlem river and back again, a distance of 20 miles, and the people who had traveled hundreds of miles to see Roosevelt would have been deprived of the pleasure. In order to overcome this obstacle so that no one would be offended, a unique arrangement was adopted by the committee. All organizations that wished to participate in the parade were assigned certain blocks along the line of march; for instance, one or two blocks were assigned to some visiting club, and the next to the public, and so on.

The procession itself was comparatively small and was led by the mounted police of New York, who were followed by the police band on foot. Then came the escort of 500 Rough Riders under the command of Robert Hunter of Oklahoma city, president of the organization. Colonel Roosevelt came next in a carriage, and his carriage was followed by a long procession of vehicles containing the members of the committee and the speakers.

The procession made its way up Broadway to Fourth street where it turned into Fifth avenue and proceeded up that thoroughfare to Fifty-ninth street, where it disbanded. The route was lined with visiting organizations, and their bands struck up as the procession approached and continued until it had passed by.

In order that Mrs. Roosevelt might share in her husband's honors and view the procession from an advantageous point, Mrs. Donald McLean, president of the Daughters of the American Revolution, had cabled her an invitation to be the guest of honor at a luncheon at Sherry's tendered by prominent members of various female organizations. Following the parade, Mr. Roosevelt joined his family and a little later went to his Long island home.

ELDEST SON OF ROOSEVELT WEDS

Theodore, Jr., and Miss Eleanor Alexander Are Married.

CULMINATION OF LOVE MATCH

Former President Witnesses Ceremony in New York Church—San Francisco to Be Home of the Couple.

New York.—Of all the June weddings of 1910, the one that has aroused the most general interest was that of Theodore Roosevelt, Jr., and Miss Eleanor Alexander which was celebrated in the Fifth Avenue Presbyterian church on June 20.

A large number of prominent people witnessed the ceremony, but naturally the most noticed person in the church, after the bride and groom, was Col. Theodore Roosevelt, father of the young man who was entering the state of matrimony. The date of the wedding had been set to permit the attendance of the former president, and this was one of his very first social engagements after his return from abroad, for he landed in New York only two days before.

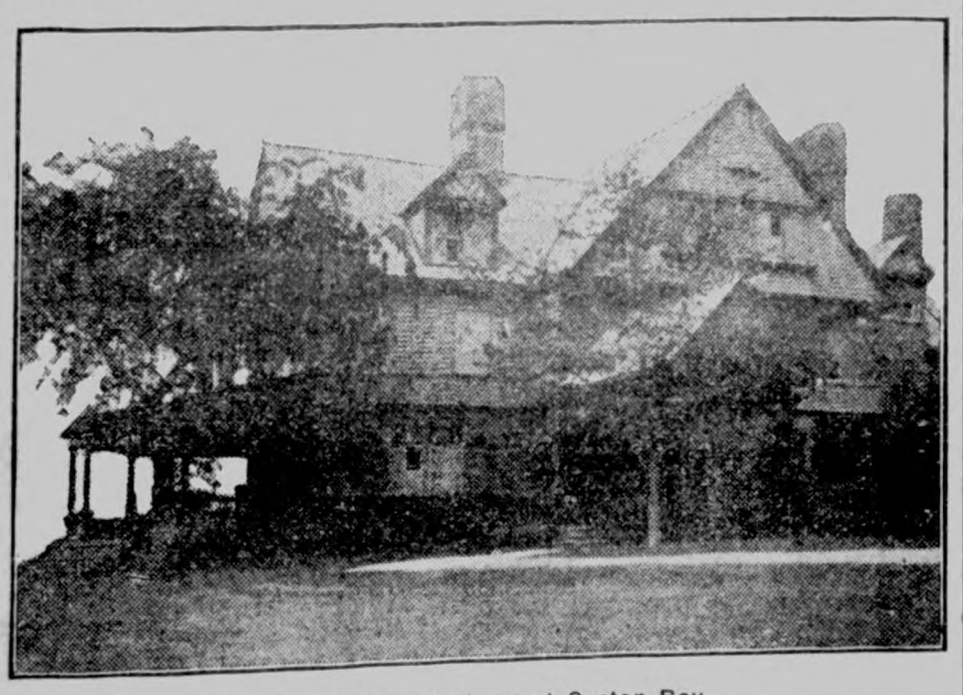
Mrs. Snowden Fahnestock, who before her own recent marriage was Miss Elizabeth Bertron, was the matron of honor, and the bridesmaids were Miss Ethel Roosevelt, Miss Jessie Millington-Drake, Miss Janetta Alexander, Miss Jean Delano and Miss Harriet Alexander.



The Roosevelt Home at Oyster Bay.

Rev. Henry M. Sanders, a great uncle of the bride, officiated, assisted by Dr. Gordon Russell of Cranford, N. J.

After the ceremony the bridal party was entertained at the home of the bride's uncle, Charles B. Alexander. At least a part of the honeymoon will be spent at Sagamore Hill, the country home of the Roosevelt family at Oyster Bay, Long Island. Later in the summer the young couple will start for San Francisco, where Mr. Roosevelt is to be in charge of the interests of the carpet manufacturing firm with which he has been associated for some time.

The love story of the young couple has been a quick-moving romance. Their engagement was announced only last winter, and the news was cabled to Colonel Roosevelt, resulting in the speedy receipt of his approval and congratulations. The bride, who is the daughter of Henry Addison Alexander of New York, is twenty-one years old, of a little more than medium height, slender, and of an attractive appearance, having an especially beautiful complexion. She is as animated as her famous sister-in-law, Mrs. Alice Roosevelt Longworth, whose house guest she was for a time just before Mrs. Longworth sailed for England to join her father.

Theodore Roosevelt, Jr., strongly resembles his father in looks, but is decidedly reserved and is generally credited with being far less democratic than certain other members of the family. As a boy he rode horseback and engaged in all the other outdoor pursuits of the juvenile Roosevelt clan at their home at Oyster Bay and he took some part in athletics during his preparatory school course at Groton and his collegiate course at Harvard, but in the main he has been less enthusiastic on the subject of life in the open than his father and brother Kermit. He has always been of a studious nature and his romance with Miss Alexander is said to have had its beginnings in the mutual love of these young people for music. For all that "Teddy, Jr.," has eschewed the sensational in outdoor athletics, he did participate two years ago in a balloon flight from Washington, in which he and the two army officers who were his fellow passengers had some rather exciting experiences.

There was no little surprise on the part of the public when Theodore, Jr., upon the completion of his college course two years ago, chose a business career as his life work, and still more wonder was aroused when he took employment in a Connecticut carpet factory in order to gather knowledge at first hand of the practical side of carpet manufacture. He started at the lowest round of the ladder, as an unskilled workman at a small salary. Of course he was promoted as he mastered the intricacies of the business, but he continued to live quietly in a modest boarding house. Many persons were skeptical as to whether young Roosevelt would stick to so prosaic an existence, but he is evidently determined to win his fortune in this sphere.

Raven's Sharp Trick.

The best talking-bird new to the big collection in the London "Zoo" is a raven who came to the aviary last year. "Hullo! Jack!" is his favorite remark, and it is the voice of one who meets an unworthy friend. Soon after he arrived he used his conversational powers with great effect upon a lammergeier who shares his cage (relates the London Spectator). The lammergeier had a piece of meat which the raven desired, but he was unwilling to surrender it. The raven hopped up. "Hullo! Jack!" he began, and the lammergeier, aghast at the voice of man, dropped his dinner and fled. But the lammergeier was never a bird of much spirit.

A Clean Man

Outside cleanliness is less than half the battle." A man may scrub himself a dozen times a day, and still be unclean. Good health means cleanliness not only outside, but inside. It means a clean stomach, clean bowels, clean blood, a clean liver, and new, clean, healthy tissues. The man who is clean in this way will look it and act it. He will work with energy and think clean, clear, healthy thoughts.

He will never be troubled with liver, lung, stomach or blood disorders. Dyspepsia and indigestion originate in unclean stomachs. Blood diseases are found where there is unclean blood. Consumption and bronchitis mean unclean lungs.

Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery

prevents these diseases. It makes a man's insides clean and healthy. It cleans the digestive organs, makes pure, clean blood, and clean, healthy flesh.

It restores tone to the nervous system, and cures nervous exhaustion and prostration. It contains no alcohol or habit-forming drugs.

Constipation is the most unclean uncleanliness. Dr. Pierce's Pleasant Pellets cure it. They never gripe. Easy to take as candy.

Eastern Colorado—the wonderful cattle country, great because of great crops of nutritious grasses and fine water. Better results are obtained in the feed-lots of Eastern Colorado than from any other district.

The best and strongest horses are raised solely on native grasses without prepared food, and bring fancy prices for cavalry purposes and general use.

Conditions are ideal for dairying or sheep raising. Mild winters—plenty of sunshine—abundant pure water, rich grasses, alfalfa, cow peas, kaffir corn, broom corn, milo maize and cane through all the year.

Hogs thrive—no cholera or other diseases that attack swine in lower altitudes. Hogs raised on alfalfa, fattened on corn raised on the same farm, cost $4 per head (including first cost of parent stock) and sell readily at top prices.

The climate of Eastern Colorado is the healtiest in the world for man and beast. Good churches, good schools and splendid markets.

Now Is the Time to Go and see for yourself. Take the longed-for trip and see the beauties of the Colorado Rockies and investigate these fertile cheap lands on the way.

Let me tell you more about Eastern Colorado along the Rock Island Lines. I want to point you to success. Send me your address, tell me the kind of farming you prefer, and I will tell you about others who have quit paying rent and now are living in healthy, happy homes of their own. Write today.

THE CABMEN OF PARIS

Hailing One Is the Same as a Declaration of War.

THEY ARE INSOLENT ROGUES

Sneers and Caustic Advice Are Showered Upon Those Who Engage Them. On Wet or Festal Days the Cabbies Spurn Those Who Want to Ride.

Among Anglo-Saxons there is a general and instinctive desire to do business on the basis of an entente cordiale. In Paris the hailing of a cabman is looked on by both parties to the transaction as an implied declaration of war. The cabman takes your measure, and you take his number if you are wise. At once he will give you a reason to remark that he has a rooted and premeditated objection to drive you where you wish to go. Perhaps he prefers the opera quarter because it is central, or should the weather be fine his heart is probably set upon driving in the Bois, while you may have business at the bourse. He explains his views on the subject selfishly and rudely.

A foreigner alighted recently from the Calais train at the Northern railway station in Paris and ordered a typical Parisian cabman, bloated, pale and absinth soaked, to drive him to the Rue Blomet, which is a street in the relatively distant Vaugirard quarter. "Peut on habiter la Rue Blomet?" ("Is it possible to inhabit the Rue Blomet?") exclaimed the ragged ruffian in an epigrammatic note of disdain which would have done honor to Beau Brummel.

But it is when the Paris cabman has once started on his "course," a warpath in the strict sense of the term, that he proves to what a limitless extent he is the enemy of mankind. His hatred of the "bourgeois," the "man in the street," in spite of and indeed because of his being a potential client, is expressed at every yard. He constantly tries to run him down, which makes strangers to Paris accuse the Paris cabman of driving badly, while in point of fact he is not driving at all, but playing with miraculous skill a game of his own which suggests cannon billiards in the hands of a world's champion.

But it is not with the public alone that he is at war. On all other cabmen whose path he crosses, on omnibus drivers, motorcar men, bicyclists, private coachmen, costermongers with barrows and (sotto voce) the police he heaps deadly insults, the least outrageous of which are "Ours!" ("Bear!") and "Fourneau!" ("Oven!"), the latter containing a subtle double meaning, intelligible only to those who have Paris "argot" or slang at their finger ends and too long to explain.

The cabman's wild career through the streets, the constant wavering and slashing of his pitiless whip, his madcap hurtlements and collisions, the frenzied gesticulations which he exchanges with his "fare," the panic stricken sight of the agonized women whose lives he has endangered, the ugly rushes which the public occasionally makes at him with a view to lynching him, the sprawlings and fallings of his maddened, hysterical, starving horse, contribute as much as anything to the spasmodic intensity, the electric blue fire diablerie, which are characteristic of the general movement of Paris.

All that can be said in mitigation of the Paris cabman's method is that "he has them in the blood." Every Parisian (and the cabman is no exception) has the soul of a dictator and the spirit of an artist. To exercise autocratic power and, failing this, to enjoy the maximum of personal freedom from all restraint, moral or social, is the goal at which he is ever aiming, openly or secretly.

Watch a Paris cabman, for instance, on a wet day or on some festival occasion, such as the New Year, when there is a big demand for his services. With what haughty disdain does he drive along the streets, deaf to every appeal, refusing every fare, rejoicing in the discomfort and inconvenience he is causing, triumphant in the thought that at last he has "the bourgeois" at his feet; that the clientele which he detests and which detests him is now a humiliated, bemuddled or bedraggled mob of supplicants waiting on his will, whom he can enrage to boiling point with his sneers and his silence or lash with his sarcasms as cruelly as he beats his horse.

Cheerfully does he sacrifice half a day's earnings to the enjoyment of this exquisite revenge, for at least he can say to his hungry wife and children when he gets home, "J'ai vecu." They may not have dined, but he has lived.

It is because the Parisian recognizes in himself a certain community of sentiment with the cabman in this attitude toward life that he tolerates him, though he does not forgive him. —Harper's Weekly.

The Kanawha Record evidently does not know enough to "lay down" when it is licked. The fact that Editor Ellsworth's pet candidate for county superintendent was not nominated at the primary election seems to have blinded him to the fact that there may have been good men running for office outside of his little ring of favorites. He gives some space in his paper last week to an article showing how Prof. Baggs was nominated and how Prof. Lloyd was not, and in the course of his remarks he said: "Mr. Lloyd could have had an endorsement from the present county superintendent had he asked for it, but knowing that Mr. Deyoe was a candidate for a state office he expected and received no further aid from him than his individual vote."

And we wish to state that if Mr. Lloyd was Mr. Deyoe's choice, he did right to vote for him, but more than that he could not be expected to do. Mr. Deyoe had a fight of his own and was asking for the support of the friends of both Mr. Lloyd and Mr. Baggs, and it was not his place to dictate in the matter of the nominee for county superintendent. The voters could decide that for themselves. We were all boosting Mr. Deyoe for state superintendent to the best of our ability, and we do not see how anyone could expect him to take either side of the fight for county superintendent We believe that Prof. Baggs and Prof. Lloyd are capable men and we are firm in the belief that the best man won, and he was the choice of the people.

The Record man might do worse than seek some secluded spot and rub his sore places—The primary election is past.

Primary Needs Fixing

The Iowa primary law needs fixing. The object of the law is probably all right, but the results are far from attaining the desired object. For instance, it was thought that the law would have the effect of making each voter cast a ballot for the candidates of his own party, but in this respect the primary law is a dismal failure. In Hancock county, for instance, there is a normal democratic vote of some 700 or 800, while at the primary election only 189 votes were cast for governor on the democratic ticket, while the republican vote was away above normal. For sheriff there were 2,012 republican votes cast, so undoubtedly a few hundred democrats voted a republican ballot in Hancock county, unless there has been an awful change in sentiment since the last presidential election.

Another objection to the law as it now stands is that the primary election comes too early, at a time when the farmers are busier than at any other time of the year, so that it tends to give the voters in the towns and cities more power than they should have. And again, the voters have too little real knowledge of the merits of the different candidates where there are so many—state, district, county and township offices to be filled with perhaps a half dozen candidates for each office. No man can vote intelligently such a ballot as was voted in Iowa on June 7th unless he spends a whole lot of time in looking up the records of the candidates, and even then it is almost impossible to get an unbiased opinion in regard to a candidate's merits. It's like voting with your eyes shut.

The Iowa primary is surely an expensive luxury. It is practically one more official election crowded in a few months before the regular one, with all the heavy expenses of a regular election.

You don't need to go far away from home in order to see that some parts of the law, at least, are wrong. In this township there were votes cast for 17 different candidates for delegate to county convention (with five delegates to elect) and 10 of the 17 each received only 1 vote, while the highest vote for any candidate was 12. For trustees there were 16 different men voted for and 11 of them got 1 vote, and one trustee was nominated on a magnificent showing of 2 votes. The man was all right but he didn't know he was running for office. For Justice of the Peace, 16 men were voted for and 14 of them got 1 vote, one of them 2 votes and the nominee got 7 votes—and of these 16 candidates voted for on republican ballots, at least 4 of them are democrats. If you ever heard of a bigger mix-up or anything presenting a more crazy appearance in election returns, we would like to be shown. And results were practically the same in all the townships. Any judge or clerk of the recent primary election will tell you that such voting at random for Tom, Dick and Harry is no joke—at least to the man who has to sit up all night and count them.

The primary is a good thing for the newspapers that print the ballots and publish the official returns when nearly every man in the county gets at least one vote for some office, but in some ways it don't look good to us as it now stands. It costs enough money to be a good one, but it falls away short of the mark.

The Old Time Celebration

THE old-time celebration is the kind I like the best:
The girls, they looked their sweetest, all in fluffy muslin dressed;
And the marshal of the day,
Mounted on a prancing bay,
Rode about a-shouting orders, and a-clearing of the way.
Into town the folks came pouring,
While the anvil shots were roaring,
With the bird of freedom soaring
All the day

Oh, the old-time celebration always meant a big parade;
Thirteen floats of lovely maidens, all in starry flags arrayed,
And the Goddess, Lib-er-tee,
Waved the emblem of the free,
Sitting on her throne of beauty, unconcerned as she could be.
And the "horribles" came after,
Clad in rags and causing laughter,
And nobody acted dafter
Then than me.

The old-time celebration meant a picnic in the grove—
Oh, the patriotic frenzies that the "noted speakers" wove!
Why, if England with her men
Had swooped down upon us then,
We who "licked her twice already" would have "licked" her once again!
For we tweaked the lion's tail
Till we seemed to hear his wail
Echo over hill and dale,
Field and glen.

On the old-time celebration there would always fall a shower,
Splashing on the red umbrellas, dripping from the leafy bower;
And the women, helter skelter,
Seized their skirts and ran for shelter,
While the air was cooled and freshened, which before had made us swelter.
Then the bunting's dripping red.
In the lemonade was shed,
And on many a lady's head,
There to welter.

So the old time celebration, which we celebrate in story,
Ended when the day was ended, ended in a blaze of glory;
With the pin-wheels flashing, whizzing;
And the rockets crashing, sizzing,
With the anvils booming, roaring;
And the fireballs looming, soaring,
There were bombs that broke in air,
Throwing starlight everywhere;
Roman candles, fire balloons,
Firmaments of stars and moons;
Then the set piece "Washington"
Told us that the day was done—
Died at last each glinting spark
And home we traveled through the dark.

Declaring Her Independence

FROM the time she was five years old Gloria West had been imbued with patriotic feeling and a reverence for the constitution of her country.

Her father had been a soldier and her grandfather before him and when she was so little as to be unable to get up into a chair without being lifted, she had to sit solemnly by the side of her sisters and brothers and listen to tales of heroism told by her father.

Gloria was nineteen now, and though her father had long since passed on to the resting place of brave soldiers, the old custom of reading the declaration on the morning of every Fourth of July still prevailed in the family.

Despite the absence of the head of the house the little circle had widened, for Gloria's brothers and sisters had married.

And there were many candidates for the place at Gloria's side. The young men in the pretty western town would gladly have joined the circle even though it meant absolute submission to the will of the beautiful Gloria.

"I wouldn't be married and submit to the wishes of a mere masculine person," she said to her sister one evening when the latter young woman was preparing to go to make a distasteful duty call for her husband.

"And what would you do?" asked the sister, indulgently.

"I'd assert my independence and—"

"And have war instead of peace in your family," interrupted the wiser sister.

"Not at all," protested Gloria laughing, "we're going to have a constitution in our family," she added with undue stress on the progressive pronouns. "And he shall abide by it."

"He?" asked her sister in surprise. "Then have you decided which one it shall be?"

Gloria was noncommittal. "At least, if I have, he doesn't know it," she said. "It is poor policy to disclose the maneuvers of war, you know."

"You're bound to have war at all events," was her sister's parting comment.

Following a fancy, Gloria had asked six of her most constant admirers to the reading of the Declaration at the old homestead on the morning of her nineteenth Fourth of July.

"I shall declare my own independence on that day," she said to John Hammon, "and every one of you boys shall sign it. Won't it be fun?—for me?" she added roguishly.

"And may I draw up a constitution to insure a perfect union, Gloria?" the young man asked, half in jest, half in earnest.

Even Gloria's quick wits failed her for a moment. There were so many ways to take that.

"Yes," she said with a gleam of daring in her eyes, as she looked squarely at him, "draw up a constitution and we'll have it put before the whole house."

"It wouldn't be necessary if you're so—so independent. You will be able to judge of its worth without assistance," he replied, and there was still an expression of half serious intent on his face.

On the evening of the noisy Fourth, when the gayeties of the day were on the wane and the old flag on its pole before the West home had fluttered bravely all day long, Gloria, with five of the signers of her independence, sat on the vine-covered veranda.

Everyone had gone but these few friends of Gloria, who each seemed anxious to have the last word with her.

In the merry jest of the morning when Gloria had laughingly presented to her professed admirers a document wherein she had set forth her acts of independence, each had felt an underlying strain of seriousness and each wanted to talk with her. Jokingly they had signed it, thereby making themselves slaves to her whims henceforth, then, and forever—all but John Hammon.

Even in view of its being the veriest jest, he refused, laughingly though it was, to add his name to the list under Gloria's perpendicular scrawl. Gloria had been accordingly piqued, and though she smiled and danced and made merry, still she wondered why he had refused so trifling a fancy on her part.

At last they were all gone and Gloria was standing on the threshold listening to their footsteps die away on the old brick walk. Presently she heard one pair of steps coming back.

"Gloria," said the deep voice of John Hammon, "just one moment before you go."

Gloria turned and saw him in the moonlight. "Yes," she acquiesced in such a strange little voice that she hardly recognized it.

"I—that is—I have drawn up the constitution," he said, his hand on his pocket.

"Have you?" she asked a trifle indifferently. She was beginning to be herself after the first unaccountable feeling of—fear, emotion, joy—she knew not what—when she had seen him turn back to her.

"Yes." He said no more.

"But you didn't sign the declaration," Gloria reminded him, a little pout on her lips.

"I'll sign anything if you say this is all right—read it," he broke off suddenly, thrusting a folded paper into her hand. "Look at it and tell me if you think it will insure us a perfect union, dear."

And in the moonlight Gloria unfolded the paper, to find lying tied within its folds a ring. She did not speak.

"Dear, give me your hand and let me draw up our constitution," he said. "Will you?"

She did; and it fitted so well—was so fitting, as Gloria put it some long minutes afterward—that she decided to accept it.

Think of Last Summer

You can remember days when the heat inside your kitchen was so great you could hardly bear it. With the right stove you would have made a better hostess. Save your health. Don't put up with the drudgery of a coal range. You can have a clean, cool, pleasant kitchen.

New Perfection
WICK BLUE FLAME
Oil Cook-stove

Cautionary Note: Be sure you get this stove—see that the name-plate reads "New Perfection."

does away with all drudgery cooking. Why should you be slave to a coal range when you can have an Oil Cook-Stove that cheaper than coal, cleaner than coal doesn't "smell," doesn't smoke, light instantly, can be put out instantly, leaves no ashes, and doesn't heat the kitchen. With one of these stoves you can bake or roast the most elaborate dinner. You can change from a slow to a quick fire, or the other way about, by simply turning a wick. Apply a match, and instantly the heat from an intense blue flame shoots upward through the turquoise-blue enamel chimneys to the bottom of pot, kettle or oven—but nowhere else. The stove has every convenience that can be thought of: Cabinet Top with shelf for keeping food and dishes hot, drop shelves to hold coffee or teapots, towel rack; in fact every convenience possible.

The nickel finish, with the bright blue of the chimneys, makes the stove ornamental and attractive.

Made with 1, 2 and 3 burners; the 2 and 3-burner stoves can be had with or without Cabinet.

Acme Company's Big Mississippi Steamer J. S. Burns

CAPTAIN SAVES MANY LIVES

Prompt Action on Part of Streckfus in Beaching Vessel Averts Panic —Three Dead and Several Others May Be Drowned.

La Crosse, Wis., June 27.—With fifteen hundred excursionists on board, the Acme Packet company's big steamer, the J. S., caught fire on the Mississippi river between Genoa and Victory Saturday night and although the steamer was burned to the water's edge, prompt action of Captain Streckfus in beaching the boat when the first alarm was sounded saved all but three on board.

The steamer brought 1,000 people from Lansing, Ia., and 500 from intermediate points to La Crosse, leaving here on the return trip at 6 o'clock.

The boat caught fire when two miles above Victoria, Wis., the blaze breaking out in the lower works close to the boiler room. Putting on full speed, Captain Streckfus headed the boat direct for Bad Axe island in mid-river, which fortunately was but a short distance away.

Before the general alarm was sounded the vessel had grounded on the sand and it was but a few minutes' work to get the people off the boat.

The crew worked valiantly to control the excursionists and although there was a great rush to get off the boat sufficient check was held on the crowd so that only a few were injured.

A few minutes after the steamer had been cleared of passengers and crew it was a mass of flames and rapidly burned to the water's edge. The excursionists were stranded on an island 500 feet long and 300 feet wide and a few launches and row boats from Victory and nearby hamlets made slow headway in getting the people to the mainland. Then the steamers, North Star and Harriet came to the rescue and delivered the people to their destination.

A number of persons on the J. S. were severely burned and were taken from Victor to De Soto by train for medical treatment. Delay in finding a landing place drove the passengers frantic.

The dead:

Mrs. Emma Randall, New Albin, Ia., drowned.

Norman Fox, Victory, Wis.

Unknown woman drowned.

Some of the people jumped into the river when the steamer J. S. approached the island from the top deck and sustained injuries, some of them of a serious nature.

Mrs. Emma Randall of New Albin, Ia., jumped as soon as the alarm was sounded, and drowned. Three men who perished were locked up in the hold forward, having become disorderly. It is believed they were burned to death.

Seriously injured:

Joseph Coyle, Lansing, Ia., both hands burned and severe injuries about the body.

Mrs. Meyer, Lansing, leg broken.

Mrs. John Joseph, De Soto, seriously injured about the head and shoulders and possibly internally.

Mrs. Archie Bailey, Victory, ankle smashed.

Mrs. Gus. Kaeppler, Victory, ankle sprained and severely bruised about the body.

The boat was valued at $50,000 and is a total loss.

DAVENPORT HAS A BIG FIRE

Washing Machine Factory, Ice Houses and Slaughtering Plant Burned Before Controlled.

Davenport, Ia., June 27—Fire broke out in the washing machine factory of the Brammer Manufacturing company in the midst of the Davenport factory district. A high wind fanned the flames, which soon threatened to burn over a large section of the city. The Rock Island, Ill., fire department was called upon to help the Davenport department combat the flames.

The washing machine factory was wiped out within an hour, the Heidt ice houses followed, then the plant of the Davenport Slaughtering and Rendering company. Residences in the district caught fire several times but were saved. A heavy rain storm aided the fire companies in getting the fire under control. The loss is estimated at $110,000, with insurance of $100,000

SEVERE STORM AT AFTON

LIGHTNING DESTROYS LUMBER COMPANY'S BUILDING.

Afton, Ia., June 27.—Lightning during a severe electrical storm at 5 o'clock Saturday afternoon set fire to the William Glattly Lumber company's shed, totally destroying the shed and contents. The loss on the building and contents is estimated at $8,000 with insurance of $5,000.

The storm was one of the most severe that the city has experienced in years. The center of the storm was in Afton and the immediate vicinity, although the territory for twelve miles around was hard hit. The rain poured down in torrents, while the electrical storm was extremely severe. Large hail stones also fell during the storm. When the storm was at its worst, Charles Sennett, the telegraph operator at the Burlington station was struck by lightning, which came in over the wires and knocked him to the floor Although severely hurt he is not seriously injured and will recover.

At Thayer, seven miles east of here, S. W. Morrison, also an operator for the Burlington, was knocked insensible by a bolt of lightning which came in over the wire. He will recover.

At the farm of W. S. Simpson, one mile west of here, his son, Walter, and a neighbor lad, Guy McCloud, had a narrow escape when the barn in which they were taking shelter was struck by lightning. One corner of the barn was shattered but otherwise no damage was done. In the barn at the time besides the two boys were four horses and 159 hogs.

CUMMINSON CONGRESS'WORK

Declares Some of It Is Good and Other Is Bad—Iowans Coming Home.

Washington, D. C., June 27.—Before departing for Iowa Saturday evening, when the business of congress was practically ended, Senator Cummins talked briefly of the work of the session. He said it was difficult to characterize in a brief way. "A great deal has been done," said Senator Cummins.

"Some of it is good and some of it is bad. To my mind about the worst thing congress has done is to pass the postal savings bill in the form in which it passed. I regard the railroad measure on the whole as a good one marked by advances in a number of respects. It is not, however, up to the mark that it ought to be. As to conservation legislation, what congress has done is simply to provide for keeping natural resources from being appropriated until further and necessary conservation legislation can be had. It gives large power to the president in the matter of withdrawals, but it is essential to lodge that power somewhere, and it should be lodged in the president rather than any other official."

Iowa members generally will lose no time in getting home.

WRECK MAY CLAIM ANOTHER

W. G. Brown, of Ottawa, Ill., Expired at Mercy Hospital, and Engineer Rutledge in Serious Condition.

Des Moines, June 27.—W. G. Brown of Ottawa, Ill., died Saturday at Mercy hospital as the result of injuries sustained in the Wabash wreck near Percy Friday night, in which thirty persons were injured.

L. B. Rutledge of Moberly, Mo., who is also at Mercy hospital, may die according to physicians attending him. All the other passengers who were injured will recover. Rutledge was engineer of the ill-fated passenger train. His chest was badly crushed and his body horribly bruised. It is thought he may be suffering from internal injuries also.

Iowa Jewelers at Des Moines.

Des Moines, Ia., June 28—The Iowa Retail Jewelers' Association met in annual session today in the Coliseum, where one-half of the hall had been filled with an attractive trade display. The state association of optometrists is meeting with the jewelers. N. Nielson of Harlan, president of the jewelers, is presiding over the sessions, and a program has been arranged for the four days in which the following topics will be discussed "How to Raise the Standard and Ability of the Coming Generation of Watchmakers." "Ways and Means of Improving Business Conditions," "Show Window Decoration," "Show Card Writing," "Business Methods," "Parcels Post," "Express Rates" and "Trusts."

DANGER SIGNALS.

Sick kidneys give unmistakable signals of distress. Too frequent or scanty urinary passages, backache, headache and dizzy spells tell of disordered kidneys. Neglect of these warnings may prove fatal. Begin using Doan's Kidney Pills. They cure sick kidneys.

Mrs. M. A. Gamblin, Russellville, Ark., says: "I was in such bad shape from kidney disease that I gave up hope of my recovery. I could rest neither night or day, the pains in my back nearly driving me frantic. There were decided dropsical symptoms such as swelling of my feet and ankles and my heart palpitated violently. After doctoring without benefit, I began with Doan's Kidney Pills and when I had used two boxes I was as well as ever."

Remember the name—Doan's.

Why She Raged.

Colonel Falsom was reading the morning paper when he exclaimed:

"What a terrible misfortune!"

"What is it—somebody got married?" his wife asked.

"No, but a married woman in a fit of rage threw a coffee cup at her husband. The cup was shivered into fragments and, one of them, cutting his jugular vein he died on the spot. The reporter says the grief of the unfortunate woman was dreadful to witness. She was frantic with remorse, and made several attempts to end her life."

"Poor creature!" said Mrs. Falsom, with a sigh. "The broken cup must have belonged to her new china set."

Recognition.

"At last," said the literary young man, "I have succeeded in having my poetry taken seriously."

"How did you manage it?"

"Put it into the love letters on which a breach of promise suit is now being based."

WESTERN CANADA

What Governor Deneen, of Illinois, Says About It:

Governor Deneen, of Illinois, owns a section of land in Saskatchewan, Canada. He has said in an interview:

"As an American I am delighted to see the remarkable progress of Western Canada. Our people are flocking across the boundary in thousands, and I have not yet met one who admitted he had made a mistake. They are all doing well. There is scarcely a community in the Middle or Western States that has not a representative in Manitoba, Saskatchewan or Alberta."

Not Sisters

Now and again you see two women passing down the street who look like sisters. You are astonished to learn that they are mother and daughter, and you realize that a woman at forty or forty-five ought to be at her finest and fairest. Why isn't it so?

The general health of woman is so intimately associated with the local health of the essentially feminine organs that there can be no red cheeks and round form where there is female weakness.

Women who have suffered from this trouble have found prompt relief and cure in the use of Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription. It gives vigor and vitality to the organs of womanhood. It clears the complexion, brightens the eyes and reddens the cheeks.

No alcohol, or habit-forming drugs is contained in "Favorite Prescription." Any sick woman may consult Dr. Pierce by letter, free. Every letter is held as sacredly confidential, and answered in a plain envelope. Address: World's Dispensary Medical Association, Dr. R. V. Pierce, Pres., Buffalo, N. Y.

Garner reports two more than Britt. Kanawha had five boys and the same number of girls. Goodell made no report while Woden reported two girls, only, but they are twins, so that while Bingham township does not hold a "full house" with Avery, it holds "two pair" over any other precinct in the county.

A Veteran Correspondent

Few among the thousands who enjoy the youthful vim and enthusiasm of Walter Wellman's special dispatches in the Chicago Record-Herald are aware that with the present year Mr. Wellman will round out a quarter of a century as a Washington correspondent. The Record-Herald always has been noted for the brilliance of its special correspondents, but Mr. Wellman's career reaches far back of the consolidation which gave the paper its present name.

Walter Wellman was born in Mentor, Ohio, in 1858. At the age of 14 he began his newspaper experience by founding a weekly paper in Sutton, Neb. In the next dozen years he was laying the foundations for the success of later years. In 1884, when he was still a young man of 26, he was intrusted with the responsible post of Washington correspondent of the Chicago Herald, a position which, through all his polar quests and various changes in the paper itself, he has held with undiminished honor to the present day. In that quarter of a century he has won a national reputation as a magnetic and forceful writer, a shrewd political prophet, a genius at news-getting and a daring explorer.

In 1892 Mr. Wellman visited the West Indies for his paper and located the spot where Columbus landed, marking it with a stone monument. In 1894 he made his first dash for the pole, reaching the latitude of 81 degrees northeast of Spitzbergen. In 1898 he tried it again, penetrating as far as Franz Josef Land and mapping many islands that had never before been explored. Two years ago he made a daring attempt to cross the arctic ice fields in an airship. Mr. Wellman has not yet reached the pole, and perhaps he never will, but he has given abundant proof of his courage and perseverance. His chief laurels however, have been won by his years of splendid work as a Washington correspondent.

THE JULY HOUSEKEEPER

While perhaps it cannot be said that the Housekeeper for July muckrakes midsummer hot days, it can at least be shown that the airy freshness of the pages puts the blistering heat to shame by teaching so many ways in which it can be overcome. The abundant fiction pages offer amusement for an afternoon in the hammock. Lilian Bell tells some new facts about satisfactory summer sanitation. The fashion plates show airy garments. But best of all, mayhap, are the household and cookery pages, for we must eat, whether at home or picnicing, and just how to make the table appetizing is very worthwhile knowledge. The Housekeeper Corporation, Minneapolis, Minn. Seventy-five cents a year.

An exchange has the following: "This," said the able citizen, as he looked over the columns of his home paper. "is what I call a spicy sheet. It seems to be absolutely fearless, and wherever it sees the head of a wrong-doer it gives that head a crack. Such a paper illustrates the true spirit of journalism! It is not only to educate the masses but to protect the masses from dishonest people. Hello! What? The blamed paper says I am utterly unfit for the office to which I aspire. Now of all the ——, reeking, rotten, and reprehensible newspapers in the universe this is the worst. I never want to see this scurrilous sheet again. Now I am going to knock a shoulder blade out of that gas-fed editor."

A SMALL WORD.

It Has Only Two Letters, Yet It Is Not Easy to Define.

To define one word in the English language one modern dictionary takes eighteen columns of small type. And this solitary word upon which the dictionary bestows such a wealth of elucidation is one that hardly anybody except a dictionary maker can define at all. The ordinary educated, English speaking person's knowledge of it could be expressed in about half a single line.

This fecund word is "of." If you were asked to define it—unless you are a dictionary maker or of an allied trade—probably you would have to reply: "Of? Why, of just means of." You might add defensively, "I always comprehend perfectly what it means when I see or hear it and can use it correctly in speech, so what do I want to define it for anyway?"

But if you were a child your actual mastery of "of" would stand you in no stead whatever. You would be set to digging out and memorizing the things the dictionary had to say about it, or the driest and least informing of them, as, for instance, that in some cases it is such a kind of preposition and in other cases some other kind and that prepositions have such and such properties when they don't have some other, every bit of which you would absolutely and mercifully forget at the first possible moment. Look over a child's grammar or "language" lesson, with its ghastly array of useless bones.—Saturday Evening Post.

Miss Scott Likes River-to-River Road.

Council Bluffs.—Dusty, begrimed and tanned, and preceded by a cavalcade of cars, Miss Blanche Scott arrived here. She was enthusiastic over the River to River road, and the reception she was given by the people living along the road. She was fairly overwhelmed at the hospitality which was showered upon her.

"Our course through Iowa has been one continual triumph," she said. "The River to River road is a stretch of the finest highway we have traversed since leaving New York May 16. In nearly every place it has been freshly dragged, and it is a pleasure to ride over it. We have been piloted from town to town. We have one continual parade. At times we have had as many as twenty-five cars as an escort from town to town. In the smaller places our advent was the signal for a regular riot. Everybody waited for the 'transcontinental girl' and in every place some sort of entertainment was given us."

Has P. M. Joice Taken Own Life?

ROUTT COUNTY, COLORADO, LAND BOOM PREDICTED.

Keen observers predict a big boom in property in Wantland, Colorado, the new town which is being built in the center of the Little Snake River Valley in Routt County, Colorado. A big irrigation system is being built to irrigate 60,000 acres of very fine land surrounding Wantland. The land is being sold by the State of Colorado for 50 cents per acre, under the Carey Act, and water rights cost $35.00 an acre, in ten year payments. Sugar factories, flour mills, canneries, etc., are among the possible industries to be located at Wantland. Full information can be obtained from the Routt County Colonization Company, 1734 Welton St., Denver, Colo.

Coming in Relays.

Twins were born to Mrs. O'Brien. When the first one was born the nurse called Jimmy and said:

"Tell your aunt to come right over. The stork has brought you a little brother."

The aunt could not come over immediately. In a half hour the nurse called Jimmy again and said:

"Run over and tell auntie the stork has brought you another brother."

Jimmy ran to his aunt's house and said:

"Auntie, the stork has brought another brother. I wonder how many he will bring before night."

SKIN HUMOR 25 YEARS

"Cuticura did wonders for me. For twenty-five years I suffered agony from a terrible humor, completely covering my head, neck and shoulders, so even to my wife, I became an object of dread. At large expense I consulted the most able doctors far and near. Their treatment was of no avail, nor was that of the —— Hospital, during six months' efforts. I suffered on and concluded there was no help for me this side of the grave. Then I heard of some one who had been cured by Cuticura Remedies and thought that a trial could do no harm. In a surprisingly short time I was completely cured. S. P. Keyes, 147 Congress St., Boston, Mass., Oct. 12, '09."

Face Covered with Pimples

"I congratulate Cuticura upon my speedy recovery from pimples which covered my face. I used Cuticura Soap, Ointment and Resolvent for ten days and my face cleared and I am perfectly well. I had tried doctors for several months but got no results. Wm. J. Sadlier, 1614 Susquehanna Ave., Philadelphia, May 1, 1909."

Horrible Thought.

"But why do you think we are in imminent danger of a war with England?"

"Ain't Alfred Austin just as likely as not to write a poem on the occasion of Roosevelt's visit?"

CORN PLANTING OVER

THAT CANADIAN TRIP SHOULD NOW BE TAKEN.

If you had intended going to Canada for the purpose of purchasing land on which to establish a home, accompanying some land company whose holdings you proposed to look over or to go up on your own account to select one hundred and sixty acres of land free, you should delay no longer. Corn-planting is over, the wheat crop is well ahead, and you have a few weeks' time before you are required in the fields again. Then make your intended trip. Reports at hand show that the crop prospects in Canada were never better than they are today. The cool weather has not affected the crop, but if anything it has been a benefit. There has been plenty of moisture and those who have had their land properly prepared look upon this year as likely to be one of the best they have had. Although many are going up this season they expect to pay two or three dollars an acre more than they were asked to pay last year. Others who have their homestead are prepared to go further from the line of railway than would have been necessary last year, as it is worth it. So it will be with others. Next year lands will be higher in price and homesteads less accessible. There is a wonderful tide of immigration to Central Canada now. It is expected that one hundred and fifty thousand new settlers from the United States will be numbered by the end of the present year, an increase of fifty per cent over last year. In addition to this there will be upwards of one hundred thousand from the old country, which does not include those who may come from the northern countries of the Continent. Those who intend to settle upon the land the reader does not require an answer to the questions, "Why do they go?" "Why are they going there in such large numbers?" Western Canada is no longer an experiment. The fact that one hundred and fifty million bushels of wheat were raised in Canada last year as against ninety-five millions the year previous, shows that the tiller of the soil in Central Canada is making money and it is safe to say that he is making more money than can be made anywhere else on the Continent in the growing of grain. He gets good prices, he has a sure crop, he enjoys splendid railway privileges, and he has also the advantages of schools and churches and such other social life as may be found anywhere. It is difficult to say what district is the best. Some are preferred to others because their friends already established. The Grand Trunk Pacific, on its line across the Continent, is opening up splendid tract of land, which is being taken up rapidly. The other railways—the Canadian Pacific and Canadian Northern are extending branch lines into parts inaccessible a couple of years ago. With a perfect network of railways covering a large area of the agricultural lands it is not difficult to secure a location. Any agent of the Canadian Government will be pleased to render you assistance and advice and suggestion, and a good plan is to write or call upon one. The Government has located agents at convenient points throughout the States, and their offices well equipped with a full supply of maps and literature.

A genius is a man who tries to borrow money—and gets it.

She must, ...ever, find her way back to Ards... for there were times when Jerry ...gerfield could be serious with her... though it rarely pleased her to ...erious with other people; and she knew that the time had long passed for her return to the house.

She did not know then that three men had witnessed her flight from the duke, or that they had taken swift vengeance upon him for his unpardonable conduct in the moon-blanched road. It was not Jerry's way to accept misfortune tamely, and after circling the wall of timber that shut her in, in the hope of determining where she had entered, she chose a trail at random and plunged into the woods. She assumed that probably all the roads and paths on the estate led more or less directly to the great house or to some lodge or bungalow. She had lost her riding-crop in her mad flight, and she broke off a switch, tossing its leaves into the moonlight and laughing softly as they rained about her.

Suddenly ahead of her through the woods floated the sound of singing—one of those strange, wavering pieux cantiques peculiar to the south. She rode on, thinking to find help and a guide back to Ardsley; then the music ceased, and lights now flashed faintly before her, but she went forward guardedly.

"I'm much more lost than I thought I was, for I must be away off the estate," she reflected. She turned and rode back a few rods and dismounted, and tied her horse to a sapling. She was disappointed at not finding a camp of Ardmore's wood-cutters, to whom she would unhesitatingly have confided herself; but it seemed wise now to exercise caution in drawing to herself the attention of strangers. She did not know that she had crossed the state line and was in South Carolina, or that the singing she had heard floated from the windows of Mount Nebo church.

She became now the astonished witness of a series of incidents that occurred so swiftly as fairly to take her breath away. A tall, loosely articulated man came from the direction of the church and walked toward her. She knelt at the tree and watched, the moonlight giving her a clear view of a rustic somewhat past middle age, whose chief characteristics seemed to be a grizzled beard and long arms that swung oddly at his side. The brim of his wool hat was turned up sharply from his forehead, and she had a glimpse of the small, keen, gray eyes with which he swept the forest before him. He freed a horse which she had not before noticed, and she expected him to mount and ride away to join others of the congregation whom she heard making off in a road beyond the church. Then, with a quickness and deftness that baffled her eyes, two men rose beside him just as he was about to mount; there was no outcry and no sound of scuffling, so quick was the descent and so perfect the understanding between the captors. In a moment the man was gathered up, bound, and flung on his saddle. She had a better view of him, now that he was hatless, though a gag had been forced into his mouth and a handkerchief tied over his eyes, so that he presented a grotesque appearance. Jerry was so absorbed that she forgot to be afraid; never in her life had she witnessed anything so amazing as this; and now, to her more complete bewilderment, the captors, after carefully inspecting their work and finding it satisfactory, seemed to disappear utterly from the face of the earth.

In the woods to her left she thought she heard a horse neigh; then she saw shadows moving in that direction; and again, from the road, she heard the brief debate of the two men as to the whereabouts of "Bill;" and it struck Jerry humorously that he would not soon see his friends unless they came and helped him out of his predicament.

It may help to an understanding of Miss Jerry Dangerfield's character if it is recorded here that never in her short life had she failed to respond to the call of impulse. She was lost in the woods, and strange men lurked about; a man had been attacked, seized, and left sitting in a state of absurd helplessness on a horse presumably his own, and there was no guessing what dire penalty his captors had in store for him.

Quiet reigned in the neighborhood of the church; the lights had blinked out; the bang of the closing shutters reassured Jerry, and she crept on her knees toward the unconscious captive, loosed his horse's rein and led it rapidly toward her own horse, a little farther back in the woods. Her blindfolded prisoner, thinking his original captors were carrying him off, renewed his efforts to free himself.

Jerry gained her own saddle in the least bit of a panic, and when she had mounted and made sure of the leading-strap with which her prisoner's horse was provided, she rode on at a rapid walk until she reached the clearing, where the stumps again grimly mocked her. She stopped to listen, and heard through the still night first one cry and then many voices in various keys of alarm and rage. Then she bent toward the prisoner, tore the bandage from his eyes, and with more difficulty freed him of the gag. He blinked and spluttered at this unexpected deliverance, then blinked and spluttered afresh at seeing that his captor was a young woman, who was plainly not of his world. Jerry watched him wonderingly, then addressed him in her most agreeable tone.

"You were caught and tied by two men over there by a church. I saw them, and when they went off and left you, I came along and brought you with me, thinking to save your life. I want to get home as quickly as possible, and though I do not know you, and am quite sure we never met before, I hope you will kindly guide me to Ardsley, and thereby render me a service I shall always deeply appreciate."

Mr. Bill Appleweight, alias Poteet, was well hardened to the shocks of time, but the pleasant-voiced girl, coolly sitting her horse, and holding his own lank steed by a strap, was the most amazing human being that had yet dawned on his horizon. He was not stupid, but Jerry's manner of speech had baffled more sophisticated minds than Appleweight's, and the sweet sincerity of her tone, and her frank countenance, hallowed as it was by the moonlight, wrought in the outlaw's mind a befuddlement not wholly unlike that which had possessed the wits of many young gallants south of the Potomac who had laid siege to Jerry Dangerfield's heart. But the cries behind them were more pronounced, and Appleweight was nothing if not a man of action.

"Take these things off'n me," he commanded fiercely, "and I'll see y' safe to Ardsley."

"Not in the least," replied Jerry, who was herself not unmindful of the voices behind. "You will kindly tell me the way, and I will accommodate my pace to that of your own somewhat ill-nourished beast. And as there's a mob looking for you back there, all ready to hang you to one of these noble forest trees, I advise you to use more haste and less caution in pointing the way."

Appleweight lifted his head and took his bearing. Then he nodded toward one of the three trails which had so baffled Jerry when first she broke into the clearing.

"Thet's the nighest," said Appleweight, "and we'd better git."

She set the pace at a trot, and was relieved in a few minutes to pass one or two landmarks which she remembered from her flight through the woods. As they splashed through the brook she had forded, she was quite confident that the captive was playing her no trick, but that in due course she should strike the high-road to Ardsley which she abandoned to throw off the duke of Ballywinkle.

It was now ten o'clock, and the moon was sinking behind the forest trees. Jerry took advantage of an occasional straight strip of road to go forward at a gallop, but these stretches did not offer frequently, and the two riders kept pretty steadily to a smart trot.

As they walked their horses through a bit of sand, the prisoner spoke;

"Who air y'u, little gal?"

Jerry turned in the saddle, so that Appleweight enjoyed a full view of her face.

"I am perfectly willing to tell you my name, but first it would be more courteous for you to tell me yours, particularly as I am delivering you from a band of outlaws who undoubtedly intended to do you harm."

He laughed—a curious, chuckling laugh. He had ceased to struggle at his bonds, but seemed resigned to his strange fate. He had not answered Jerry's question, and had no intention of doing so. The sudden attack at the church had aroused all his cunning. Appleweight, alias Poteet, was an old wolf, and knew well the ways of the trapper; but the bold attempt to kidnap him was a new feature of the game as heretofore played along the border. He did not make it out; nor was he wholly satisfied with the girl's explanation of her presence in that out-of-the-way place.

He had several times called out directions as they crossed other paths in the forest, and they now reached the main trunk road of the estate. The red bungalow, Jerry knew, was not far away. Her prisoner spoke again.

Renewed His Efforts to Free Himself.

Turpentine and Forests.

You do not know the turpentine tappers, but if you come to Florida you will soon find them out. It is a curious business that will deliberately destroy all the forests of a half dozen states for a little immediate gain; and still more curious is the lassitude that allows the destruction to go on. The French have a method of tapping trees which gives a profitable return and leaves the trees practically uninjured. In this way an industry is perpetuated, but our American tapping is another thing.

The trees are cut with a broad ax, hewing out great slices and leaving scars from which the resin flows into boxes at the bottom of the cut and is scraped once a month into casks. The cut is repeated each year, and in six or seven years the tree is exhausted. So go great forests of pine that stand 80 to 100 feet high, leaving us thousands of acres of standing lumber which will be cut down by portable sawmills. The end of it all is a haggard waste.—E. P. Powell, in Outing.

Smoking in Churches.

At the present day smoking is common in South American churches. A recent visitor to Peru records that in the church of La Merced, Lima, he noticed one of the congregation enjoying a cigar while the service was going on, and through the open door of the sacristy he caught a glimpse of a bishop who was about to preach indulging in the same luxury.

The preacher was attired in full episcopal robes and had tucked a handkerchief under his chin to prevent these being soiled by ashes. In Lima cathedral smoking is so far recognized that a spittoon is placed in each of the stalls set apart for the chapter.

A SAVAGE WITCH.

His Life Was Saved by the Chief of the Quiah Tribe.

The author of "Heroes of Modern Crusades," the Rev. Edward Gilliat, M. A., at one time master of Harrow school, says in his book that he had years ago the privilege of meeting the king of the Quiah country, Tetti Agamasong, at Harrow. The Quiah king had been educated at St. Augustine's college, Canterbury, and was able to lecture to the Harrovians in good English. In his lecture he told a quaint story which brings one nearer to the weird lives of the Quiahs, a small agricultural and trading tribe of inoffensive characters on the west coast of Africa.

"In my country," said the king, "we have no prisons; therefore if a culprit is brought to me I must chop off something—an ear or two, a hand or a foot—and he goes home a sadder and a wiser man. Just before I left for England a chief came to my hut, bringing a prisoner.

"'What has he done, friend?' I asked.

"'He is a dangerous witch, O king. He can turn himself into an alligator.'

"'Pooh! Nonsense! I don't believe that old fashioned stuff.'

"'Oh, but we saw him do it down by the big river.'

"Indeed! Well, chief, tell me all about it. You saw him yourself?'

"'I did. We were hunting by the banks of the river with our rifles when all at once we saw a big alligator lying on a rock in the river. The witch man was lying asleep in a hammock some fifty yards away. Oh, the dangerous creature he is!

"'Well, king, do not laugh with your eyes like that, for I am speaking the truth. I put up my rifle to shoot the alligator; but, to our great fear, as soon as I fired this fellow rolled out of his hammock and fell on the ground and rubbed his back and swore he was hurt.

"'Now, O king, if this witch had not been inside the alligator how could he have been hurt when I fired?'

"Gentlemen," concluded the king, "I see you are laughing with your eyes, but it is very difficult to rule over a people untaught and given over to superstition.

"What did I do? Why, if I had left him free they would have killed him as soon as I had gone on my ship, so I saved his life by chopping off his left ear."

MODERN CHESS.

The Game Vastly Different From That of the Ninth Century.

Chess is but a game, a pastime, a relaxation, but it has at times absorbed the faculties of the intellectual in every clime. Perhaps the greatest eulogy on the game was the remark of Sir Walter Raleigh, "I do not wish to live longer than I can play chess." It is certain that those who do not play the game are quite unable to form any conception of the high intellectual delights experienced by the chess enthusiast.

The origin of chess has been sought in vain. The fact is the game has so changed, developed and improved down the course of centuries that in its present form it would not be recognized by its inventor, if there ever was one. The oldest chess problem on record is thought to be that contained in an ancient Persian manuscript attributed to Caliph Kalifen Mutasin Billah, who reigned in Bagdad A. D. 833 to 842. But the reader would have to learn the old rules before it was intelligible. For example, the queen could make a move of only one square at a time and that on a diagonal, but a queen promoted from a pawn was allowed to make a move of two squares diagonally. The bishop had no power over any square except the third from which it stood on its own diagonal line, but it was allowed to vault over any piece that happened to be between. In short, it was a totally different game. Chess in the precise form in which we know it and play it today is a comparatively modern game. —London Strand Magazine.

Amending a Proverb.

There are a lot of silly proverbs knocking about. Take, for instance, "If pigs had wings they would fly." Now, this is absurd if you like. Do you know what sized wings a pig weighing eighty pounds would require in order to fly? They would measure about thirty yards from tip to tip. A nice state of things to keep pigs in an aviary with wings of that size! The proverb would run much better:

If pigs could fly
Pork would be high.

—London Scraps.

The Right Way.

Little Willie liked ice cream, but he objected to turning the freezer. One day his mother was agreeably surprised to find him working at the crank as if his life depended on it.

"How did you get Willie to turn the ice cream freezer?" she said to her husband. "I offered him 2 cents to do it, and he wouldn't."

"You didn't go about it the right way, my dear," replied her husband. "I bet him a cent he couldn't turn it for half an hour!"

"I dunno, but I guess some of th' musical comedy jokes must reach back pretty nearly that far."—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

RED MEN DO HER HONOR

Hundredth Anniversary of Kil-so-quah, Indian Princess, is Celebrated by Members of the Order.

Roanoke, Ind., July 4—Many members of the Order of Red Men from northern Indiana and northwestern Ohio assembled here today and took part in the celebration of the one hundredth anniversary of the birth of Mrs. Anthony Revarre, an Indian princess whose native name is Kil-so-quah. Among the distinguished men who came to this village to do honor to the aged woman and who delivered addresses were Gov. Thomas R. Marshall of Indiana and Judge Robert S. Taylor, a member of the United States Board of Missssippi river commissioners.

In the middle west there is no more interesting character than Mrs. Revarre. The blood of the Miamis flows in her veins, unmixed with that of the whites. She is the granddaughter of Little Turtle, the famous Indian chief who for many years ruled the Miami tribe of Indians. Her father was Wak-shiu-gay, a son of Little Turtle, and her mother was a daughter of She-mac-e-nish, one of the bravest among the Miami warriors.

Kil-so-quah was born in 1810. The number of her years she has kept by notches cut in a hickory cane used by her grandmother during her declining years.

In 1862 she married an Indian warrior who died a year after. Her second husband, Anthony Revarre, was a half-breed. By hm she had one son. who was born just after her father's death in 1850. This son, Anthony, now lives with his aged mother.

"SANE FOURTH" VERY LIVELY

Five Thousand Regular Army Troops Take Part in Chicago's Great Patriotic Demonstration.

Chicago, July 4—Chicago proved today that a sane Fourth need not be a dull Fourth, for its celebration of the day was one of the best and liveliest ever held. This was due in large part to the presence and participation of 5,000 troops of the regular army who are now camped on the lake front in Grant Park. The soldiers took part in the monster parade devised by a committee of citizens, and this served as an opening for a big military tournament which will continue for ten days.

The military forces at the camp include representatives of every branch of the service—infantry, cavaly, artillery, engineers, signal and hospital corps and even a detail of aviators. There will be exhibitions every afternoon and evening of the different working duties of these men. in a great field with immense seating capacity and where no admission fee will be charged. Besides furnishing an interesting and edifying spectacle for the people, the camp is a most valuable object lesson for the National Guard.

By MEREDITH NICHOLSON

ILLUSTRATIONS BY RAY WALTERS

COPYRIGHT 1908 BY THE BOBBS-MERRILL COMPANY

SYNOPSIS.

Thomas Ardmore and Henry Maine Griswold stumble upon intrigue when the governors of North and South Carolina are reported to have quarreled. Griswold ingles himself with Barbara Osborne, daughter of the governor of South Caro-ina, while Ardmore espouses the cause of Jerry Dangerfield, daughter of the governor of North Carolina. These two young ladies are trying to fill the shoes of their fathers while the latter are miss-ing. Both states are in a turmoil over Bob Appleweight, an outlaw with great political influence. Unaware of each oth-er's position, both Griswold and Ardmore set out to make the other prosecute Ap-pleweight. Ardmore organizes a big hunt. Griswold also takes the field. Frank Col-lins, Atlanta reporter, is arrested by Ard-more, but released to become press agent for the young millionaire's expedition. Griswold's men capture Bill Appleweight. Jerry Dangerfield discovers the captive outlaw and leads him to Ardsley, her own prisoner.

CHAPTER XIII.—Continued.

"Little gal, I'm an ole man, and I ain't never done y'u no harm. Your house is only a leetle way up thar, and I cain't be no more use to y'u. I want t' go home, and if y'u'll holp me untie this yere harness—" and he grinned as he viewed his bonds in the smaller light of the open road.

Then hoof-beats thumped the soft earth of another of the trails that converged at this point, and Ardmore and Collins flashed out upon Jerry and her captive, amid a wild panic of horses.

Appleweight twisted and turned in his saddle but Jerry instantly held up her hand and arrested the inquiries of her deliverers.

"Mr. Ardmore, this gentleman was most rudely set upon by two strangers as he was leaving a church over there somewhere in the woods. I was lost, and as his appearance at the time and place seemed almost providential, I begged him to guide me toward home, which he has most courteously done," said Jerry, to give the proper touch to her explanation, twitched the strap by which she held her prisoner's horse, so that it danced, adding a fresh absurdity to the wobbling figure of its bound rider.

"You are safe!" cried Ardmore in a new tone, to which Jerry nodded care-lessly, in a way that directed atten-tion to the more immediate business in hand. He was not at once sure of his cue, but there seemed to be some-thing familiar in the outlines of the man on horseback, and full identifica-tion broke upon him now with as-tounding vividness.

"Jugs," he began, addressing the prisoner smilingly, "dear old Jugs, to think we should meet again! Since you handed me the jug on the rear end of the train, a few nights ago, life has had new meanings for me, and I'm just as sorry as can be that I gave you the buttermilk. I wouldn't have done such a thing for billions in real money. And now that you have fallen into the excellent hands of Miss Dan-gerfield—"

"Dangerfield!" screamed the pris-oner, lifting himself as high in the saddle as his bonds would permit.

"Certainly," replied Ardmore. "Your rescuer is none other than Miss Ger-aldine Dangerfield."

"Why, gal," began the outlaw, "ef your pa's the guv'nor of No'th Caro-line, him an' me's old frien's."

"Then will you kindly tell me your name?" asked Jerry.

"Allow me to complete the intro-duction," interrupted Collins, who had clung back in silence. "Unless my eyes deceive me, which is wholly im-probable, this is a gentleman whom I once interviewed in the county jail at Raleigh, and he was known at that time as William Appleweight, alias Boteet."

"You air right," admitted the pris-oner without hesitation, and then, ad-dressing Jerry: "Yer pa would be glad to know his dorter had helped an ole frien' like me, gal. Ye may hev heard him speak o' me."

"But how about that message in the cork of the jug you put on the train at Kildare?" demanded Ard-more. "And why did you send your brother to try to scare me to death at Raleigh?"

"That is not of the slightest impor-tance," interrupted Jerry, gently play-ing with the tether which held Mr. Appleweight; "nor does it matter that papa and this gentleman are friends. But this is indeed the famous outlaw, Mr. William Appleweight, then, papa and no papa, friend or no friend, he is a prisoner of the state of North Caro-lina."

"Pris'ner!" bawled Appleweight—"an' you the guv'nor's gal—"

"You have hit the situation exactly, Mr. Appleweight; and as far as the office of governor is concerned, it is capably filled by the young gentleman at your left, Mr. Thomas Ardmore. But let us now adjourn to his house, where, if I am not mistaken, a bit of cold fowl is usually to be found on the sideboard at this hour. But hold"—and Jerry checked her horse—"where can we lodge this gentleman, Mr. Ardmore, until we decide upon his further fate?"

"We might put him in the wine cel-lar," suggested Ardmore.

"He shall be treated with the great-est consideration," said Jerry, and thereafter, no further adventure be-falling them, they reached Ardsley, where their arrival occasioned the greatest excitement.

CHAPTER XIV.

A Meeting of Old Friends.

Habersham's men had proved ex-ceedingly timid when it came to the business of threshing the woods for Appleweight, whom they regarded with a new awe, now that he had van-ished so mysteriously. They had searched the woods guardedly, but the narrow paths that led away into the dim fastnesses of Ardsley were for-bidding, and these men were not with-out their superstitions. They had awaited for years an opportunity to strike at the Appleweight faction; they had at last taken their shot, and had seemingly brought down their bird; but their lack of spirit in re-trieving the game had been their undoing. They had only aroused their most formidable enemy, who would undoubtedly lose no time in seeking revenge. They were a dolorous band who, after warily beating the woods, dispersed in the small hours of the morning, having found nothing but Appleweight's wool hat, which only added to their mystification.

"We ought to have taken him away on the run," said Habersham bitterly, as he and Griswold discussed the mat-ter on the veranda of the prosecutor's house and watched the coming of the dawn. "I didn't realize that those fel-lows lived in such mortal terror of the old man; but they refused to make off with him until the last of his friends had got well out of the way. I ought to have had more sense myself than to have expected the old fox to sit tied up like a calf ready for market. We had all his friends accounted for—those that weren't at prayer meet-ing were marked down somewhere else, and we had a line flung pretty well round the church. Appleweight's deliverance must have come from somewhere inside the Ardmore prop-erty. Perhaps the game warden picked him up."

"Perhaps the Indians captured him," suggested Griswold, yawning, "or maybe some Martian came down on a parachute and hauled him up. Or, as scarlet fever is raging at Mr. Ardmore's castle,"—and his tone was icy—"Appleweight was probably seized all of a sudden, and broke away in his delirium. Let's go to bed."

At eight o'clock he and Habersham rode into Turner Court House, and Griswold went at once to the inn to change his clothes. No further steps could be taken until some definite re-port was received as to Appleweight's whereabouts.

It had been the most puerile trans-action possible, and he was aware that a report of it, which he must wire at once to Miss Barbara Osborne, would not impress that young woman with his capacity or trustworthiness in difficult occasions. The iron that had already entered into his soul drove deeper. He had ordered a fresh horse, and was resolved to return to Mount Nebo church for a personal study of the ground in broad daylight.

As he crossed the musty parlor of the little hotel, to his great astonish-ment Miss Osborne's black Phoebe, stationed where her eyes ranged the whole lower floor of the inn, drew at-tention to herself in an elaborate courtesy.

"Miss Barb'ra wish me t' say she done come heah on business, and she like fo' to see yo' all right away. She done bring huh saddle, and war a-gwine ridin' twell you come back. She's a-gettin' ready, and I'll go tell huh you done come. She got a heap o' trouble, thet young missis, so she hev," and the black woman's pursed lips seemed to imply that Prof. Gris-wold was in some measure respon-sible for Miss Osborne's difficulties.

As he stared out into the street a negro brought a horse bearing a bet-ter saddle than Mingo county had ever boasted, and hitched it near the horse he had secured for himself. An instant later he heard a quick step above, and Miss Osborne, sedately followed by the black woman, came downstairs. She smiled and greeted him cordially, but there was trouble in her brown eyes.

"I didn't warn you of my coming. I didn't want to be a nuisance to you; there's a new—a most unaccountable perplexity. It doesn't seem right to burden you with it—you have already been so kind about helping me; but I dare not turn to our oldest friends—I have been afraid to trust father's friends at all since Mr. Bosworth act-ed so traitorously."

"My time is entirely at your service, Miss Osborne; but I have a shameful report to make of myself. I must tell you how miserably I have failed, be-fore you trust me any further. We—that is to say, the prosecuting attor-ney of this county and a party he got together of Appleweight's enemies—caught the outlaw last night—took him with the greatest ease—but he got away from us! It was all my fault, and I'm deeply disgusted with my-self!"

He described the capture and the subsequent mysterious disappearance of Appleweight, and confessed the obvious necessity for great caution in further attempts to take the outlaw, now that he was on guard. Barbara laughed reassuringly at the end of the story.

"Those men must have felt funny when they went back to get the pris-oner and found that he had gone up into the air. But there's a new fea-ture of the case that's more serious than the loss of this man—" and the trouble again possessed her eyes. She drew from her purse a cutting from a newspaper and handed it to him.

"That's from last night's Columbia Vidette, which is very hostile to my father."

He was already running over the heavily leaded column that set forth without equivocation the fact that Gov. Osborne had not been in Colum-bia since he went to New Orleans. It scouted the story that he was abroad in the state on official business con-nected with the Appleweight case—the yarn which Griswold had forced upon the friendly reporter at the tele-graph office in Columbia. The gov-ernor of a state, the Vidette went on to elaborate, could not vanish without leaving some trace of himself, and a Vidette representative had traced the steps of Gov. Osborne from New Or-leans until he had again entered South Carolina under cover of night and for purposes which, for the honor of the state, the Vidette hesitated to dis-close.

The writer of the article had ex-hausted the possibilities of gentle suggestion and vague innuendo in an effort to create an impression of mys-tery and to pique curiosity as to further developments, which were promised at any hour. Griswold's wrath was aroused, not so much against the newspaper, which he as-sumed had some fire for its smother-ed trifle of smoke, but against the governor of South Carolina himself, who was causing the finest and noblest girl in the world infinite anxiety and pain.

"The thing is preposterous," he said lightly. "The idea that your father would attempt to enter his own state surreptitiously is inconceivable in these days when public men are de-nied all privacy, and when it's any man's right to deceive the press if he finds it essential to his own comfort and peace; but the intimation that your father is in South Carolina for any dishonorable purpose is prepos-terous. One thing, however, is cer-tain, Miss Osborne, and that is that we must produce your father at the earliest possible moment."

"But"—and Barbara hesitated, and her eyes, near tears as they were, wrought great havoc in Griswold's soul—"but father must not be found until this Appleweight matter is set-tled. You understand without making me speak the words—that he might not exactly view the matter as we do."

It was a painful subject; and the fact that she was driven by sheer force of circumstances to appeal to him, a stranger, to aid her to perform a public service in her father's name rallied all his good impulses to her standard. It was too delicate a mat-ter for discussion: it was a thing to be ignored; and he assumed at once a lighter tone.

"Come! We must solve the riddle of the lost prisoner at once, and your father will undoubtedly give an ex-cellent account of himself when he gets ready. Meanwhile the fiction that he is personally carrying the war into the Appleweight country must be maintained, and I shall step to the railway station and wire the Columbia newspaper in his name that he is in Mingo county on the trail of the outlaws."

(TO BE CONTINUED.)

To Start A Tight Screw.

Lots of folks have tried to remove a stubborn screw from a piece of wood, a screw that won't budge at all, and have in the end given it up as a bad job. Well, if such a thing occurs again don't give it up, don't lose your temper or exert yourself, but try this recipe for removing the screw:

Heat a poker red hot, and then hold it against the screw head for a little while, wait a few minutes for the screw to cool down, when it will be found that the screw can be re-moved quite easily with the same screw driver that just previously would not perform the work. The ex-planation is quite simple.

The red hot poker heats the screw, the screw expands and makes the hole it is in just a wee bit bigger. The screw then cools down and resumes its original size, leaving the hole in the wood a size too large—and there you are.

Mud-Throwing Too Popular.

A New York merchant told a story illustrative of what he declared to be the attitude of this whole country—no doubt including artists, as he named no exceptions. "In the United States we throw mud," he said: "It's all in the story of the small girl with a fist-ful of it standing by a corner.

"Who you waitin' for, sis?'

"'Mabel.'

"'What's she done?'

"Nothin'. Don't you know she's Queen of the May?'"

Look Out, Boys!

A German professor has found that a boy in walking a mile through the streets of a town is exposed to 10,000,-000 germs and microbes that may cause his death. It seems they never do cause his death, but the only safe way for a boy to do is to remain at home and take out the ashes and bring in the coal. If he feels any dan-ger he can black the cookstove and whitewash the cellar.

TUMOR OF YEARS GROWTH

Removed by Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound

Holly Springs, Miss.—"Words are inadequate for me to express what your wonderful medicines have done for me. The doctors said I had a tumor, and I had an operation, but was soon as bad again as ever. I wrote to you for advice, and began to take Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound as you told me to do. I am glad to say that now I look and feel so well that my friends keep asking me what has helped me so much, and I gladly recommend your Vegetable Compound."—MRS. WILLIE EDWARDS, Holly Springs, Miss.

One of the greatest triumphs of Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound is the conquering of woman's dread enemy—tumor. If you have mysterious pains, inflammation, ulceration or displacement, don't wait for time to confirm your fears and go through the horrors of a hospital operation, but try Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable compound at once.

For thirty years Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, made from roots and herbs, has been the standard remedy for female ills, and such unquestionable testimony as the above proves the value of this famous remedy, and should give everyone confidence.

If you would like special advice about your case write a confidential letter to Mrs. Pinkham, at Lynn, Mass. Her advice is free, and always helpful.

KIND TO KIDS.

Clara—He's a kind-hearted automo-bilist, isn't he?

Clarence—Expectionally so. I nev-er knew him to run over even a child unless he was in a hurry.

There's a Reason.

"Paul, if I were to die, should you marry Widow Muller?"

"Good heavens, no!"

"Why not? Every one says how like me she is."

"Yes, that's just the reason."

Why Bother About It?

"Do you think a man who will neg-lect his business to go to baseball games is of sound mind?"

"Oh, come, let's be optimistic. I can't believe everybody's crazy."

Few of us use to the full the re-sources of happiness that are avail-able. Happiness depends upon the treatment of what we have, and not of what we have not.—E. J. Hardy.

Also has cement feed troughs and slop barrels where feed is mixed. In the crib drive-way is a set of scales, an elevator will carry the corn up into the crib. He will grind his feed for the stock, the feed being elevated into a bin. A gasoline engine furnishes the power. He recently disposed of one car-load of fat stock, and is now feeding a couple car loads more.

Teething children have more or less diarrhoea, which can be controlled by giving Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhoea Remedy All that is necessary is to give the prescribed dose after each operation of the bowels more than natural and then castor oil to cleanse the system. It is safe and sure. Sold by all dealers.

Triumph of a New Idea

About the quantity of reading matter furnished in the average Sunday newspaper there is no reason to complain—unless it be on the score of too-muchness—but the quality often leaves much to be desired. The only shining and unqualified exception to this rule is found in the unique Sunday Magazine of the Chicago Record-Herald. There is nothing else like it in the whole range of American journalism. It is a real magazine that is regularly issued as a part of the Sunday paper. It is filled with first class fiction, able articles, choice pictures and a wide range of good miscellany, all by popular or really famous authors and artists. When writers such as Conan Doyle, Anthony Hope, Jack London, Sewell Ford and Cyrus Townsend Brady are counted among the contributors to a Sunday paper its triumph can no longer be doubted.

The Sunday Magazine of the Record-Herald is far and away the best literary treat offered to newspaper readers in the United States today. The largest monthlies and independent weeklies cannot surpass it in quality or sustained interest. You will always find one of the finest serials of the year in its pages, often captured from the big monthlies at record prices. Its short stories, including those of the delectable Shorty McCabe, can't be surpassed.

Chamberlain's Stomach and Liver Tablets gently stimulate the liver and bowels to expel poisonous matter, cleanse the system, cure constipation and sick headache. Sold by all dealers.

JOY THAT BRINGS WOE

Shock of Sudden Glad Tidings at Times Turns the Brain.

IT HAS DRIVEN PEOPLE MAD.

Some of the Saddest Cases of Lunacy Are Those Where the Mind Is Unable to Stand the Strain of News of Unexpected Good Fortune.

It is no exaggeration to assert, said an asylum doctor of long and varied experience, that there are scores of men and women in insane asylums who have literally been sent there through excess of joy. Many of these cases which are, in my opinion, the saddest of all have come under my own observation.

I remember in the very first asylum with which I was connected one of the patients was a strikingly handsome and very well educated man, who was as sane as you or I except on one point. He was really a man of considerable wealth, but his delusion was that he was a pauper, and he would tell the most pitiful tales of his destitution, begging, with tears in his eyes, for a few coppers with which to buy bread.

According to the story told me, he was the only son of a wealthy merchant. In his youth he had fallen among evil companions and had led such a dissolute life that his father not only threatened to disinherit him, but forbade him ever to enter his house again. After that he seems to have sunk into the lowest depths of poverty until he was glad to earn a few coppers by selling papers or matches in the streets.

It was at this last and lowest stage that news came to him that his father had died intestate and that he was heir to all his vast fortune. The sudden news completely turned the man's brain and brought on such a condition of excitement that he had to be sent to an asylum, and when he calmed down again he had lost all recollection of his good fortune, and nothing could shake his delusion that he was on the verge of starvation.

Another patient in the same asylum was a young and in his lucid moments a most intelligent fellow, whose "brain was turned," as the saying is, on learning that he had passed an examination. He had sat for the matriculation examination at the University of London, on passing which he had set his heart and had asked a friend in London to wire the result as soon as the names were screened at Burlington House.

About three weeks later came a fatal telegram, "Failed—sorry," which sent the young man into the lowest depths of despair, for he was too old to sit again. Not many hours later, however, came another telegram, "Passed honors—very sorry crush so great did not see name this morning." The revulsion of feeling was so great that the student's reason gave way, and he became so violent in his excitement that he had to be confined. Fortunately he was not with us long and is now, I am glad to know, doing very well as a solicitor.

Disappointed love sends many people to asylums, but it is very seldom that success in wooing drives a man mad. It had this strange effect, however, on one of my late patients. The girl he loved had gone out to India to keep house for her brother before he had screwed up his courage to the point of proposing to her, but an offer followed by mail very quickly after her.

Weeks and months passed and no answer came to the impatient lover until, after waiting two years in despair, he became engaged to a girl who had nothing but her money bags to recommend her and for whom he had not a particle of love. Scarcely, however, was his fate sealed than he received the long despaired of letter from India, accepting his offer and explaining that the girl's brother had received and mislaid the letter, which had only just been found and had come into her hands.

Within an hour of the receipt of this letter the man was a raving maniac, and, although his condition is improved, I doubt whether he will ever recover his reason.

In another remarkable case it was the joy at seeing her husband again that robbed a lady patient of her reason. Her husband was the captain of a merchant ship which was reported to have gone down with all hands. The widow had deeply mourned her husband for nearly a year when one day on returning from a walk she found him sitting in the drawing room as hale and robust as ever.

With a shriek she fell unconscious on the floor, and when she recovered her reason was gone. It seems that her husband, after floating for some time, had been picked up by a passing "tramp" and had been landed on the west coast of Africa, from which he had returned home by the first available vessel.—London Spectator.

COUNTY CONVENTIONS

The county conventions were held at the county seat last Saturday and were well attended. In the republican convention every township in the county excepting Avery was represented. Not much business was transacted and the session was brief. J. E. Wichman was chosen chairman and C. R. Wood secretary at the republican gathering, and the democrats elected A. J. Malek chairman and Isaas Sweigard secretary.

Delegates were selected to the state, judicial and congressional conventions. On the republican delegation to the judicial convention, Ell township is represented by Frank Gruetzmacher, and P. M. Griesemer is on the democratic delegation to the state convention. Wm. Katter is one of the democratic delegates to the judicial convention.

The conventions were both harmonious to a high degree The republican delegation to the state convention is divided—about two progressives to one stand-patter. The democratic delegates are all progressives, we understand.

The free application of Chamberlain's Liniment is all that is needed and it is certain to give quick relief. Give it a trial and see for yourself how quickly it relieves the pain and soreness.

Lame Shoulder.

Lumbago.

When muscular rheumatism attacks the muscles in the small of the back it is called lumbago. It is usually quite severe and every movement adds to the pain, and especially when one attempts to straighten up. No internal treatment is required. Keep quiet, as every movement aggravates the disease, and apply Chamberlain's Liniment freely, and you will soon be well again.

Sprains and Bruises are cured by the free application of Chamberlain's Liniment in about one-third the time required by the usual treatment.

Some of our people celebrated the 4th at Meservey, some stayed at home and some went to Garner, and those who went to Garner wished they had stayed at home according to many reports we have heard. We hear that all the amusements they had there in the afternoon were a farmers ball game and a fat man's race. However we can't say from experience as we did not not go.

Every resident of Hancock county should bear in mind that the nomination on the republican ticket for State Superintendent of Public Instruction is to be made at the state convention August 3rd. You should also remember that A. M. Deyoe is a candidate and not miss an opportunity of furthering his candidacy at all times.

Some of our people attended the Fourth of July celebration at Meservey. Charley Kluckhohn and Del Countryman played ball with the Meservey team against Goodell, Goodell winning 4 to 2. Our boys gave a good account of themselves, Kluckhohn scoring both of Meservey's runs and getting four safe hits.

Your attention is respectfully called to the statements of the condition of the Klemme banks in this issue of the Times. Klemme has two banking institutions that would be a credit to a much larger town and that these two institutions enjoy the utmost confidence of our people is shown by the large deposits—the figures running to the high mark of $290,406.12, which is some deposits for a town the size of Klemme. FROM THE MOUTHS OF BABES

Johnny Probably Told the Truth, but at a Dreadfully Inopportune Time.

A teacher in one of the lower grade schools was entertaining two visitors to the classroom. Several days previously the teacher had furnished amusement and at the same time increased the children's store of knowledge by a series of questions of the following nature:

"What do we sit on that rhymes with hair?"

Some child would answer: "Chair."

Today the visitors would be pleased to observe how readily the pupils could answer.

"What do I wear on my head that rhymes with cat?" asked the instructress.

Up went the hand of a boy with red hair.

"Well, Johnny," said she, "you may tell us."

Johnny arose and appeared frightened.

"It's a rat," he blurted.

And then the tableau.

Get After the Flies.

With the warm days flies multiply amazingly. Now is the time to attack them and prevent the breeding of millions from the few hundreds that already exist.

Perhaps the most effective method of destroying flies is by burning pyrethrum in each room. This stuns the flies and they can be swept up and burned.

Flies are dangerous carriers of disease and an enemy of humankind. Do your part toward keeping down the pest and improving the health of your community.

Some people would accomplish a lot more if they didn't waste so much time telling others what they are going to do.

You never heard of salary seeking the man, did you?

AT AMES, WEDNESDAY, JULY 6

Secretary of Agriculture Will Make Address at Public Opening Exercises of Graduate School of Agriculture.

Ames, Ia., July 1—The public opening exercises of the fourth session of the graduate school of agriculture will be held Wednesday evening, July 6, at 8 p. m., in the assembly room of the new hall of agriculture.

A program of great excellence has been prepared. Secretary James Wilson of the United States department of agriculture will be here and deliver an address. The address of welcome to the Iowa State college will be given by Dean Curtiss. Addresses will also be delivered by President Thompson of Ohio State university, Dr. Armsby, one of the most eminent authorities in animal nutrition, and by Dr. True of the office of experiment stations.

It will indeed be a great opportunity, seldom afforded the residents of the state, to hear men of such reputation on agricultural subjects.

A cordial invitation to attend is extended to all interested in agriculture and its advancement.

The following program has been arranged: Invocation, Dr. O. H. Cessna; presiding, Dr. H. P. Armsby; address of welcome to the Iowa State college, Dean C. F. Curtiss; response on behalf of the Association of American Agricultural Colleges and Experiment Stations, President Thompson; "Graduate Study in Agriculture," Dr. Armsby; "History and Aim of the Graduate School of Agriculture," Dr. True; address, Secretary James Wilson.

Prepare for Elks Meeting.

Marshalltown.—What promises to be the largest gathering of Elks ever held in Iowa will be the state convention of the order to be held here Aug. 16, 17 and 18. The local lodge is making great preparations to entertain the delegates and between 5,000 and 6,000 Elks and their wives are expected. The local lodge and business men will spend $3,500 in decorating the city and putting up prizes for the different features of the parade, which will be held on Thursday. The convention session will be held in the Odeon theater, and the ladies will have the freedom of the new Elks' clubroom. Twenty bands, from all parts of the state, will furnish music for the convention. Lloyd R. Maxwell of this city is president of the state association; J. B. Sullivan, Des Moines, vice president; J. R. Frailey, Fort Madison, secretary; and, A. Henigbaum, Davenport, treasurer. The local lodge will serve a banquet to the visitors during the convention, and will put on a program of racing at the fair grounds.

Pawnbroker Gets Junkin Reward.

Ottumwa, Iowa. — Judge C. W. Vermillion of Centerville has announced his decision in the John Junkin reward case for the apprehension and conviction of the murderer of Clara Rosen, giving the reward of $700 to Jacob Redman, a local pawnbroker. Redman purchased a diamond stone from Junkin which he took from the ring of the murdered girl and turned the diamond over to the police and Junkin's arrest followed. Five hundred dollars of the reward was offered by the city of Ottumwa and the remaining $200 equally was given by Dr. D. C. Brockman and C. O. Nelson, the latter a brother-in-law of the murdered girl. Mayor T. J. Phillips, Dr. Brockman and Mr. Nelson must bear the cost of the suit. Junkin will hang July 29 at the Ft. Madison penitentiary.

Picking Pimple Is Fatal.

Sioux City.—As a result of picking a pimple on his right cheek, John Ulrich, aged 25, of Mapleton, died in a local hospital. Several days ago he opened the pimple with his finger nail. His face became infected and his head swelled to large proportions. The poison spread all through his body and he suffered terribly several hours before death.

$800,000 in Autos in Marshall County.

Marshalltown.—According to figures compiled by automobile dealers it is estimated and it is believed conservatively, that there is at least $800,000 invested in automobiles in this county. More than fifty machines were sold in the county last month, and many of them were bought by farmers.

Epworth League State Convention.

Colfax, Iowa.—Much interest is being aroused among the Epworth Leagues throughout the state in the biennial state convention and summer institute which meets at Epworth park, here, Aug. 8 to 14. This promises to be one of the greatest gatherings of Methodist young people ever held within the state, both in point of attendance and in real helpfulness.

A unique contest which has been launched among the twenty-one districts throughout the state promises to make the aim of 1,000 delegates a reality.

The institute classes will provide for every phase of Epworth league work and will be in charge of the most competent workers to be had, while some of the best known speakers of the country will be heard at the afternoon and evening lecture hours. This offers an excellent opportunity for a week's summer outing as the delegates will camp in tents furnished by a camping company on the grounds. The beauty of Epworth park must be seen and the pleasures of a week's outing there enjoyed to be appreciated. When it is considered that there are more than 600 Epworth league chapters in the state having a total membership of nearly 30,000, the scope of the movement is better understood. Rev. Horace L. Houghton of Sioux City is the president and H. E. Jaques of Mount Pleasant the secretary of the state organization.

Nasbies to Clear Lake.

Clear Lake.—Nasbies of the third and fourth class will meet here in annual convention July 21 and 22. A program in which many postmasters of this part of the state will have a part is just out. The meeting includes all the postmasters of the northern and central districts of the state. The committee on arrangements consists of E. O. Wood of Union, F. E. Drake of Radcliff, W. D. McKercher of Manly and W. A. Simpkins of Britt. The address of welcome will be by Postmaster Gray of Clear Lake. Among the speakers on the program are G. Stewart of Floyd, who will discuss "Money Orders;" H. G. King of New Hartford, "Registers;" Eugene Secor of Forest City, "The Postmaster and the Public;" A. E. P. Gillette of Geneva, "Benefits of the Classified Service;" O. G. Nelson of Ellsworth, "Side Lines for the Fourth Class Offices;" James Ellickson of Thompson, "Better Postal Service;" Inspector J. D. Farrell of Mason City, "Model Postmaster," and A. E. Frederick of Conrad, "Office Hours, Rents, Etc."

Runaway Horse Breaks Neck.

Dows.—To see a horse take fright at a train, run 100 feet and drop dead in its tracks, was the unusual sight which was presented to the station. The animal was a large farm horse belonging to Robert Clemons, and was unused to trains. It saw the approaching train and started to run, having gone but a short distance when it stumbled and fell, breaking its neck.

Bride's Uncle Officiates.

Mason City—A brilliant wedding took place when Miss Ruth Stockman, daughter of Dr. and Mrs. G. C. Stockman, was married to C. E. Johnson, of Fort Dodge. Eugene Chafin of Chicago, former candidate for the presidency on the prohibition ticket, and an uncle of the bride, performed the ceremony. There was a large number of guests present.

Mapleton Farmer Killed by Bolt.

Mapleton.—Richard Smith, a farmer living five miles south of this place, was struck and killed by lightning. Mr. Smith had just brought his team out of the barn to hitch up preparatory to going to the field. His wife was talking to him when the bolt struck. A doctor was hastily summoned by auto but nothing could be done.

Accidentally Shot by Playmate.

Iowa City.—Edwin Records, son of a manufacturer, was accidentally shot in the thigh with a revolver by James Harrison, a playmate, while fishing. Harrison threatened to drown himself if Records reported the shooting to his parents, which caused the latter to conceal the injury an entire day.

Gave Skin to Save Boy's Life.

Marshalltown.—When her son's life was despaired of because of frightful burns that did not heal, Mrs. Ben Forrey of this city, submitted to the removal of large patches of her own skin that her boy might have the necessary assistance toward recovery.

Two Boys Hurt in Runaway.

Council Bluffs.—Axel Heningson, aged 14 years, and Reinold Edholm, aged 12 years, were thrown over a fence in a runaway and so badly hurt that both may die. They were driving a young colt.

Authority on Soup.

A little boy, promoted to company dinner at the family table, enjoyed his oyster cream hugely until he came to an unrecognized object at the bottom of the plate.

"What is it? Oh, just an oyster, dear," responded the child's mother, sharply appealed to.

"Why did Dora put it in?"

"Oh, to make the soup good."

"She can leave it out next time," the tiny epicure decided. "The soup's good enough without."—Exchange.

WOMAN'S ADVANCE IN CHINA

One of the Most Encouraging Signs of Progress That the Great Empire Has Yet Given.

When Christ begins to uplift a race, the evidence of it is seen in the position and education of woman. In the great land of China woman is still ignorant and enslaved to man. Mentally, morally and physically she is still near the bottom of the ladder—but a change is coming and has, in fact already become evident. A new style of woman is appearing, with unbound feet, with face washed from the old-time paint and powder, with the impulse and admitted right to take her place beside the men of her family and acquaintance in social and intellectual life.

Perhaps the most evident change has been in the line of woman's education. Thirty years ago there was not even the simplest classic for them; now the road to highest education is opening. The very men who a generation ago wished to keep them in subjection now demand they shall be like their western sisters.

"A cry comes from all over China for teachers, for women who know," says a writer in Woman's Work. "This need offers perhaps the greatest opportunity for American young women that exists anywhere for the Chinese are willing to pay for English, for music, for anything. It is decreed that their women must be enlightened."

Another sign of progress in China is seen in the new official Chinese almanac, which contains for the first time in its history the Christian Sunday as well as the Chinese holy days.

BOY TORTURED BY ECZEMA

"When my boy was six years old, he suffered terribly with eczema. He could neither sit still nor lie quietly in bed, for the itching was dreadful. He would irritate spots by scratching with his nails and that only made them worse. A doctor treated him and we tried almost everything, but the eczema seemed to spread. It started in a small place on the lower extremities and spread for two years until it very nearly covered the back part of his leg to the knee.

"Finally I got Cuticura Soap, Cuticura Ointment and Cuticura Pills and gave them according to directions. I used them in the morning and that evening, before I put my boy to bed, I used them again and the improvement even in those few hours was surprising, the inflammation seemed to be so much less. I used two boxes of Cuticura Ointment, the same of the Pills and the Soap and my boy was cured. My son is now in his seventeenth year and he has never had a return of the eczema.

"I took care of a friend's child that had eczema on its face and limbs and I used the Cuticura Soap and Ointment. They acted on the child just as they did on my son and it has never returned. I would recommend the Cuticura Remedies to anyone. Mrs. A. J. Cochran, 1823 Columbia Ave., Philadelphia, Pa., Oct. 20, 1909."

A Teacher in the Making.

She was a popular young normal student, who had been to a party the night before, and as a consequence, was "not prepared" in the geography class.

The woman instructor, true to her method of drawing upon the general knowledge of a student rather than to permit a failure, after eliciting two or three inconsequential "stabs" from her fair but jaded disciple, asked for the products of China.

The victim brightened. "Tea," she asserted, preparing to sit down.

"Yes, and what else?" encouraged the instructor.

The young woman smiled with sweet hopelessness.

"Now you can mention others, I am sure. Just think about it."

"Tea," drawled the flute-like voice of the pretty girl, "and," puckering her forehead with an intellectual tour de force, "and laundry work."—Youth's Companion.

Up to Date Milking Scene.

"What's going on around here?" asked the surprised visitor. "Is this a hospital?"

"Oh, no," answered the tall man in the silk hat; "this is the stage setting for a New England farm drama. The next act will be the milking scene."

"But I thought the young lady in the antiseptic apron was a trained nurse?"

"Oh, no; she is the milkmaid. The young man in the rubber gloves that you thought was a doctor is the farm boy. As soon as they bring in the sterilized stool and the pasteurized pails and find the cow's tooth brush the milking scene will begin."

In the Way.

"You haven't much of a memory for dates," said the conversational boarder.

"Nope," replied Farmer Corntossel. "I used to have. But it interferes with business when you're sellin' spring chickens."

When Father Helped.

The fond father held the manuscript while his son practised the oration.

"Shall we permit the ruthless hand of the hydra-headed tyrant," cried the youth, "to—to—to—well, what is it?"

The father was wrestling with the manuscript.

"Oh, yes," he muttered, "here it is: 'to dessicate.' Go on."

"It's desecrate," cried the boy, indignantly. "'Shall we permit the ruthless hand of the hydra-headed tyrant to desecrate the—the—the—' why don't you prompt me?"

The father was staring hard at the manuscript.

"The—the poodle—paddle—poodleum of our liver ties," he stammered.

"It's the 'palladium of our liberties,'" roared the boy. "Gimme that paper—I'll say it meself."

And he stalked away angrily.

Wrong Angle.

"There's a bright side to everything."

"A bright side! Bah!"

"Well, there is."

"Do you mean to tell me, doctor, that there is a bright side to my having had my leg amputated?"

"Indeed, there is; and if you could put yourself in my place you could really see it."

A woman can stand a lot of suffering if she doesn't have to keep quiet.

A Hibernian Verdict.

A New Yorker is the happy employer of an aged Irishman, who grows eloquent over the woes of the Emerald isle. Said the boss: "Pat, the king of England is dead."

The old man was silent for a moment. Then he took off his hat.

"Well," he said slowly, "as a man he was a fine bit of a boy. As Englishmen go, he was as good as yez can make them. As a king, there was nobody on earth as could beat him. But still, I'll keep me eye on George."

CAUTION IN THE MINT.

They Almost Strain the Air to Save Particles of Gold.

It has been aptly said that no miser guards his treasure more religiously than Uncle Sam watches over the precious metals that pass through his mints. Then, too, the precautions against waste are almost innumerable.

Every evening in each of the mints of the United States the floors of the melting rooms are swept cleaner than a New England housewife's kitchen. The dust is carefully put aside, and about once in two months the soot scraped from every flue is transferred to the same precious dust heap. This is then burned, and from its ashes the government derives no inconsiderable income. The earthenware crucibles used in melting are employed no more than three times. They are crushed beneath heavy rollers, and in their porous sides are found flakes of the precious metal.

In the melting room when the casters raise their ladles from the melting pots a shower of sparks fly from the molten surface of the metal. For the most part they are bits of incandescent carbon, but clinging to the carbon is often a minute particle of metal. Lest such particles should escape, the ashes and clinkers below the furnaces are gathered up at night. This debris is ground into powder by means of a steam crusher and then is sold to a smelter, like ordinary ore, at a price warranted by the assayer.

The ladles that stir the precious metal, the big iron rods, the strainers and the dippers, all are tested in a most curious fashion. After considerable use they become covered with a thin layer of oxidized silver, closely resembling a brown rust. The implements are then laid in baths of a solution of sulphuric acid, which eats away the iron and steel and leaves the silver untouched.

Gradually the ladle, or whatever the implement is, will disappear, and in its place remains a hollow silver counterpart of the original, delicate as spung glass. These fragile casts reproduce the ladle with perfect accuracy in all its details, although their surfaces are perforated with innumerable little holes. Scarcely have they been molded, however, before they are cast into a crucible to become in time dollars, quarters and dimes.

In one corner of the melting room there is a large tank into which newly cast silver bars are dropped and left to cool. Infinitesimal flakes of silver scale off and rise to the surface of the water, which acquires the metallic luster of a stagnant pool. Here is silver that must not be lost, so beneath the pipe through which the tank is emptied is banked a thick layer of mud. As the water filters through it the mud retains the precious residuum. Four times a year this mud is removed, and each experiment discloses the fact that some $50 has been saved.—Baltimore American.

His Text.

The three-year-old son of a Methodist minister was with his mother at a gathering of ladies. At the proper time he was given a cooky. He ate it in short order and asked for another. The hostess said:

"I'll give you another if you will sing for us."

"Can't sing," was his reply, "but I know something I can say."

"That will do all right," the lady answered, expecting to hear "Twinkle, twinkle, little star," or some other nursery classic.

But the little fellow drew himself up in real Sunday school fashion and said his piece:

"God loveth a cheerful giver."

The lady gave him the cooky, and the whole company seemed to be very cheerful about it.—Harper's Magazine.

A Water Telescope.

Norwegian fishermen use a water telescope to ascertain the position of the herring shoals. This is the way to make the water telescope:

Procure a tube made of tin and funnel shaped about three and a half feet long and ten inches in diameter at the largest end. It should be wide enough at the top to take in the observer's eyes, and the inside should be painted black. At the bottom, or wide end, a clear, thick piece of glass must be inserted, with a little lead in the form of a ring to weight the tube. When the instrument is immersed in clear water it is astonishing how many fathoms down the observer can see.

The Sybarites.

The Sybarites were the inhabitants of the ancient city of Sybaris, in southern Italy, founded 720 B. C. They were so greatly addicted to voluptuousness and self indulgence that their name became a byword among the peoples of antiquity. The word "sybarite" is used at the present day to denote a person devoted to luxury and pleasure.

DELINQUENTS MUST PAY

Under the above caption the Sedalia (Mo.) Democrat editorially says:

"Editor Fay, of Lyons, Ia., has been called to Washington city because his subscription list is not as well paid up as the law requires.

"He will have to explain to government officials why he has not compelled his subscribers to pay up according to postal rules.

"An inspector had visited him two months previously, and his subscription list was said to be pretty thoroughly paid up, but evidently it was not sufficiently so.

"It seems a little tough that a newspaper owner has to be hauled up before the government on the charge of having violated federal laws just because he does not eternally keep dunning his subscribers for the small sums they owe on subscription; but it is like the end of the world—no man knows when it cometh; and no editor knows what day an inspector may pop in and ask to see the lists."

The Times prints the above in order that our readers may see that the new postal regulation is no joke. After your subscription is one year in arrears we must stop the paper or place a one cent stamp thereon. There are a few on our list whose subscriptions are just expiring, so if you fail to get your paper next week, you will know the reason. We don't do this from choice as we are not at all anxious to lose subscribers. If your subscription is about to expire come in and settle. We are going to stop all subscriptions as soon as they are a year in arrears, as we don't wish to take any chances, thank you.

Pay up.

Bro. Flint of the Klemme Times got out of bed backwards the other morning, pulled his sock over his right hand, siezed his pencil and proceeded to give us his views of the primary election law. Well, he can't cuss it too much, but we would remind him that it is a republican measure which the democrats tried to defeat and were called all sorts of bad boys for so doing.—Democrat.

Yes, the democrats tried to defeat the primary law all right, but since it has been adopted, they have so fallen in love with the scheme that they are showing their appreciation by voting the republican ticket at the primaries. Isn't it so, Bro. Brackett?

Klemme candidates on the republican ticket always fail to get recognition by the powers that be, but on the democratic ticket we landed two candidates this year—Wm. Lau for sheriff and Chas. W. Stiehl for recorder.

Did you notice how the Democrat at Garner is supporting the democratic county ticket—Nit! Can it be that Bro. Brackett has been converted and is running a democratic paper in name only?

For the Public Good

One hears a good deal about the power of the press, but the fact is that no newspaper has very much real power over men or events in these days unless it is known to be standing sanely and steadfastly for the welfare of the whole community and nation. The day of party organs is past. Sensational papers appealing to popular passions cannot move thoughtful men—the men who make history. The only kind of newspaper that really has tremendous power in these days is the independent, reliable, disinterested journal of wide circulation, whose columns are known to stand always for the general good—for public honesty and a square deal, whatever happens. An excellent example of this sort of journalism is the Chicago Record-Herald. It has the enormous circulation that deservedly goes with the printing of all the news, but its power lies in its wise, conservative, independent editorial policy, which is shaped with one sole end in view—the public good. Its news and critical columns show the same spirit.

WATERWAY MEN IN SESSION

Upper Mississippi River Improvement Association Holding Its Ninth Convention in St. Paul.

St. Paul, Minn., July 12.—Although the passage of the river and harbor bill by congress providing for the completion of the upper Mississippi river channel within 12 years ended the work originally designed by the Upper Mississippi River Improvement association, that body still has much to do in providing better facilities for transportation. This subject is the chief one for discussion at the ninth annual convention of the association, which opened here today.

Delegates were named by the governors, mayors and various organizations of Illinois, Missouri, Iowa, Minnesota and Wisconsin, and there was a large attendance when President Thomas Wilkinson of Burlington, Ia., rapped for order. The commercial associations of St. Paul have made elaborate plans to entertain the delegates for luncheons and a banquet.

COUNTRY'S WEALTH IN OIL

Industry That Has Grown to Enormous proportions Within a Few Years.

The production of oil in the United States has grown from nothing at the time of its discovery to enormous proportions. Millions of barrels have been taken from the country near the western slope of the Alleghenies in western Pennsylvania, and millions more from the districts in West Virginia and Ohio. Indiana has yielded its share and Illinois has been productive beyond the dreams of avarice.

It remained, however, for Kansas and Oklahoma, together with the Indian Territory, to open the eyes of the modern driller and capitalists. When the soil was first tapped in the wildcatting operations of that section great gushers rewarded the efforts of the men who had the courage and capital to engage in the enterprise. The usual rush followed, but many thousands of acres had been already taken up and the war for supremacy began.

To greet misfortune with a smile is decidedly a one-sided flirtation.

When that his house would be a con- t point from which to study the eight situation, I wired him was on the way, and to my amazement he replied that he not entertain me—that scarlet was epidemic on the estate—on almost uncounted acres!"

They went into the woods back of the church, where Griswold began to exercise his reasoning powers.

"Some one must have come in from this direction and freed the man and taken him away," he declared.

He knelt and marked the foot-prints where Appleweight had been tied; but the grass here was much trampled, and Griswold was misled by the fact, not knowing that news of Appleweight's strange disappearance had passed among the outlaw's friends by the swift telegraphy of the border, and that the whole neighborhood had been threshed over hours before. It might have been some small consolation to Griswold had he known that Appleweight's friends and accomplices were as much at a loss to know what had become of the chieftain as the men who had tried so ineffectually to kidnap him. From the appearance of the trampled grass many men had taken a hand in releasing the prisoner, and this impression did not clarify matters for Griswold.

"Where does this path lead?" asked Barbara.

"This is Ardsley land here, this side of the church, and that trail leads on, if I remember, to the main Ardsley highway, with which various other roads are connected—many miles in all. It's inconceivable that the deliverers of this outlaw should have taken him into the estate, where a sort of police system is maintained by the forestry corps. I don't at all make it out."

He Knelt and Marked the Hoof-Prints Where Appleweight Had Been Tied.

He went off to explore the heavy woods on each side of the trail that led into Ardsley, but without result. When he came gloomily back he found that in his absence Barbara had followed the bridle-path for a considerable distance, and she held out to him a diminutive pocket handkerchief, which had evidently been snatched away from the owner—so Barbara explained—by a low-hanging branch of an oak, and flung into a blackberry bush, where she had found it. It was a trifle, indeed, the slightest bit of linen, which they held between them by its four corners and gravely inspected.

"Feminine, beyond a doubt," pronounced Griswold sagely.

"It's a good handkerchief, and here are two initials worked in the corner that may tell us something—'G. D.' It probably belongs to some guest at Ardsley. And there's a very faint suggestion of orris—it's a city handkerchief," said Barbara with finality, "but it has suffered a trifle in the laundry, as this edge is the least bit out of drawing from careless ironing."

"And I should say, from a certain crispness it still retains, that it hasn't been in the forest long. It hasn't been rained on, at any rate," added Griswold.

"But even the handkerchief doesn't tell us anything," said Barbara, spreading it out, "except that some woman visitor has ridden here within a few days and played drop the handkerchief with herself or somebody else to us unknown."

"She may have been a scarlet fever patient from Ardsley; you'd better have a care!" And Griswold's tone was bitter.

"I'm not afraid; and as I have never been so near Ardsley before, I should like to ride in and steal a glimpse. There's little danger of meeting the lord of the manor, I suppose, or any of his guests at this hour, and we need not go near the house."

He saw that she was really curious, and it was not in his heart to refuse her, so they followed the bridle-path through the cool forest, and came in due course to the clearing where Jerry had first confessed herself lost, and thereafter had suffered the captured outlaw to point her the way home.

"The timber has been cut here since my last visit, but I remember the bridle-paths very well. They all reach the highroad of the estate ultimately. We may safely take this one, which has been the most used and which climbs a hill that gives a fine outlook."

The path he chose had really been beaten into better condition than either of the others, and they rode side by side now. A deer feeding on a grassy slope raised its head and stared at them, and a fox scampered wildly before them. It seemed that they were shut in from all the world, these two, who but a few days before had never seen each other, and it was a relief to him to find that she threw off her troubles and became more animated and cheerful than he had yet seen her.

They reached the highroad much sooner than Griswold had expected, and he checked his horse abruptly, remembering that he was persona non grata on this soil.

"We must go back; I mustn't be seen here. The workmen are scattered all about the place, and they all know me."

"Oh, just a little farther! I want to see the towers of the castle!"

If she had asked him to jump into the sea he would not have hesitated; and he was so happy at being with her that his heart sang defiance to Ardmore and the splendors of Ardsley.

They were riding now toward the red bungalow, where he had often sprawled on the broad benches and chaffed with Ardmore for hours at a time. Tea was served here sometimes when there were guests at the house; and Griswold wondered just who were included in the party that his quondam friend was entertaining, and how Mrs. Atchison was progressing in her efforts to effect a match between Daisy Waters and her brother.

The drives were nearly all open to the public, so that by the letter of the law he was no intruder, but beyond the bungalow he must not go. Sobered by the thought of his breach with Ardmore, he resolved not to pass the bungalow whose red roof was now in sight.

"It's like a fairy place, and I feel that there can be no end to it," Barbara was saying. "But it isn't kind to urge you in. We certainly are doing nothing to find Appleweight, and it must be nearly noon."

It was just then—he vividly recalls the moment—as Griswold felt in his waistcoat for his watch—that Miss Jerry Dangerfield, with Thomas Ardmore at her side, galloped into view. They were racing madly, like irresponsible children, and bore boisterously down upon the two pilgrims.

Jerry and Ardmore, hatless and warm, were pardonably indignant at thus being arrested in their flight, and the master of Ardsley, feeling for once the dignity of his proprietorship, broke out stormily.

"I would have you know—I would have you know—" he roared, and then his voice failed him. He stared, he spluttered; he busied himself with his horse, which was dancing in eagerness to resume the race. He quieted the beast, which nevertheless arched and pawed like a war-horse, and then the master of Ardsley bawled:

"Grissy; I say, Grissy!"

Miss Osborne and Prof. Griswold, on their drooping Mingo county nondescripts, made a tame picture before Ardmore and his fair companion on their Ardsley hunters. The daughter of the governor of South Carolina looked upon the daughter of the governor of North Carolina with high disdain, and it need hardly be said that this feeling, as expressed by glacial glances, was evenly reciprocal, and that in the contemptuous upward tilt of two charming chins the nicest judgment would have been necessary to any fair opinion as to which state had the better argument.

The associate professor of admiralty was known as a ready debater, and he quickly returned his former friend's salutation, and in much the same contumelous tone he would have used in withering an adversary before a jury.

"Pardon me, but are you one of the employes here?"

"Why, Grissy, old man, don't look at me like that! How did you—"

"I owe your master an apology for riding upon his property at a time when pestilence is giving you cause for so much concern. The death-rate from scarlet fever is deplorably high—"

"Oh, Grissy!" cried Ardmore.

"You have addressed me familiarly by a nickname sometimes used by intimate friends, though I can't for the life of me recall you. I want you to know that I am here in an official capacity, on an errand for the state of South Carolina."

Miss Dangerfield's chin, which had dropped a trifle, pointed again into the blue ether.

"You will pardon me," she said, "but an agent of the state of South Carolina is far exceeding his powers when he intrudes upon North Carolina soil."

"The state of South Carolina does what it pleases and goes where it likes," declared Miss Barbara Osborne warmly, whereupon Mr. Ardmore, at a glance from his coadjutor, waxed righteously indignant.

"It's one thing, sir, for you to ride in here as a sight-seer, but quite another for you to come representing an unfriendly state. You will please choose which view of the matter I shall take, and I shall act accordingly."

How "Pop" Billings Got a Bargain.

C. K. G. Billings, who has paid a larger sum of money for trotters and pacers to drive on the road and amateur matinee races, and owned more of them, than any ten horse lovers in the country, tells of a very sad experience in the first horse he ever owned in his life.

When quite a young man, Mr. Billings fancied a fast trotting mare priced to him at $2,000, but not having more than $500 to his name, he persuaded his mother to advance him the balance, which she did after much begging. In due time his father heard of the fast trotter his son had bought, and expressed a desire to try her.

The request was complied with, and after a few spins on the board the old gentleman asked how much he had paid for her. "Six hundred dollars, father," was the answer.

"Well, Charley, the mare is not worth it," said the governor, "but I rather like the way she steps, so I will take her from you and you can have your $600." The deal had to be closed.

Useful and Happy.

Try to be useful just where you are. Many of us are fond of imagining how much we should do if our circumstances were other than they are. But that is waste of time. The thing to do is to do as much as you can for others here and now, and so make the most of your opportunities.

Don't be so busy preparing for some vague future time when you will be happy that you have no time to be happy to-day. The future will soon be the present, and the chances are that, when it does come, we shall still be so busy planning that we shall miss our chance of happiness altogether.

A Quiet Maid.

Lady Visitor—"That new girl of yours seems very nice and quiet." Mistress—"Yes, she's very quiet. She doesn't even disturb the dust when she's cleaning the room."

HIS WISH.

Mrs. Henpeck—Ah Henry, when I'm gone you'll never get another wife like me.

Mr. Henpeck (sotto voce)—I hope not.

A Protection Against the Heat.

When you begin to think it's a personal matter between you and the sun to see which is the hotter, buy yourself a glass or a bottle of Coca-Cola. An Answer in Kind.

"How did the trouble in the family start?"

"The wife, it seems, got tired of her husband's heavy wit."

"Why didn't she simply make a light retort?"

"She did. She threw the lamp at him."

Looked Like a Pattern.

"My dear," asks the thoughtful husband, "did you notice a large sheet of paper with a lot of diagrams on it about my desk?"

"You mean that big piece with dots and curves and diagonals and things all over it?"

"Yes. It was my map of the path of Halley's comet. I wanted to—"

"My goodness! I thought it was that pattern I asked you to get, and the dressmaker is cutting out my new shirtwaist by it!"—Chicago Evening Post.

Foxy Hiram.

"Well, now, if that ain't surprising!" ejaculated Mrs. Ryetop, as she shaded her eyes with her hand. "There goes old Hiram Skinflint, and rather than step on a poor black ant he picked it up, and I bet he is going to drop it somewhere out of the reach of danger."

Her husband laughed knowingly.

"Not Hiram Skinflint, Mandy. He'll go down to Jed Weatherby's general store and order a pound of granulated sugar. Then while Jed is looking another way he'll drop the ant among the grains and tell Jed as long as his sugar has ants in it he ought to sell it at half price. Like as not he'll try to get Jed to throw in two or three raisins and a yeast cake. You don't know Hiram Skinflint."

CALLED TO HER REWARD

The Angel of Death has entered another Klemme home and taken away the mother from her little ones and from a loving husband. This time the Death Angel called Mrs. G. R. Waterman, who passed to her reward last Thursday night, July 7th, at ten o'clock. This news came as a shock to many and as a sad blow to all who knew her. All that loving hands and earthly power could do, was done for her, but to no avail, and while the bereavement to those afflicted may seem almost too hard to bear, they can only feel that an All-wise Providence knows and decrees what is best for his children.

Deceased was the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Julius Studt, and was born in Benton county, Iowa, Nov. 21, 1886, and on the first Christmas Day of the same year she was baptized in the name of the Triune God by her uncle Phil Studt. After she had attended the Lutheran parochial school for a period of 8 years, and after having received catechetical instruction by her uncle she was confirmed in the Lutheran church at Luzerne, Iowa, in 1901 with a class of sixteen children. On December 30th, 1903, she was united in marriage to George R. Waterman and they came to Klemme to make their home, and have been among our best and most highly respected citizens ever since.

Short services were held at the residence in Klemme on Friday evening, Rev. Koch of Garner officiating, and the remains were taken to Luzerne, Iowa, for interment. At Luzerne the funeral and burial services were held on Sunday at ten o'clock, Rev. Schroeder of the German Lutheran church officiating.

Deceased was a Christian woman, a most loving and devoted wife and mother, and her loss is most keenly felt in the home made desolate by her passing. Besides the husband and three little daughters, deceased leaves a mother and father, two sisters and two brothers.

The sympathy of the whole community goes out to the bereaved husband and the little children, and also to the other relatives, in their dark hour of affliction.

A BAD THING TO NEGLECT.

Don't neglect the kidneys when you notice lack of control over the secretions. Passages become too frequent or scanty; urine is discolored and sediment appears. No medicine for such troubles like Doan's Kidney Pills. They quickly remove kidney disorders.

Mrs. A. E. Fulton, 311 Skidmore St., Portland, Ore., says: My limbs swelled terribly and I was bloated over the stomach and had puffy spots beneath the eyes. My kidneys were very unhealthy and the secretions much disordered. The dropsical swellings began to abate after I began using Doan's Kidney Pills and soon I was cured."

The Lost Chords.

The village concert was to be a great affair. They had the singers, they had the program sellers, they had the doorkeepers and they would doubtless have the audience. All they needed was the piano, but that they lacked. Nor could they procure one anywhere.

At last the village organist learned that one was possessed by Farmer Hayseed, who lived "at the top o' the 'ill." Forthwith he set out with two men and a van.

"Take it, an' welcome," said Hayseed cordially "I've no objections s'long as ye put 'Pyenner by Hayseed' on the program."

They carted it away.

"An' I wish 'em joy of it," murmured Mrs. Hayseed, as the van disappeared from sight.

"Wish 'em joy of it," repeated Hayseed. "What d'ye mean?"

"Well, I mean I only 'ope they'll find all the notes they want," replied the good woman. "'Cos, ye see, when I wanted a bit o' wire I allus went to the old pianner for it."

What's the Answer?

We're ready to quit! After sending two perfectly rhymed, carefully scanned, pleasurably sentimental pieces of poetic junk to seventeen magazines and having them returned seventeen times, we turn to the current issue of a new monthy and find a "pome" modeled after Kipling's "Vampire," and in which home is supposed to rhyme with alone, run on page eleven with all the swell curlycues ordinarily surrounding a piece of real art. If poetizing is a gift we are convinced that this poet's must have been. As for us, we are on our way to the woodshed to study the psychology of the ax or any other old thing that hasn't to do with selling poetry to magazines.

The Miser of Sag Harbor.

"Economy," said Daniel W. Field, the millionaire shoe manufacturer of Boston, who at the age of forty-five has entered Harvard, "economy is essential to wealth, but by economy I don't mean niggardliness.

"Two many men fail to attain to wealth because they practise a cheeseparing and mean economy that gets everybody down on them.

"They practise, in fact, an economy like that of old William Brewster of Sag Harbor. William, you know, would never buy oysters because he couldn't eat shells and all."

NEGRO EASY VICTOR

JEFFRIES NOT THE WONDERFUL PUGILIST OF OLD.

IS MANY TIMES BEATEN DOWN

Onslaughts of Colored Champion Irresistible and White Man Time and Again Forced to Take Count to Recuperate.

By W. W. NOUGHTON.

Reno Nev.—It is no longer Jim Jeffries' proud boast that he has never been knocked down by a blow from a glove. He was sent to the floor three times in the fifteenth round of the fight July 4 and each time a huge negro with a torn lip and blood-bespecked golden teeth stood over him and grinned.

For several rounds it had been evident that Jeffries' chances of winning had faded. He came from his corner and within a few seconds was in a clinch and being cuffed by Johnson in the way he had been cuffed for at least eight rounds. Breaking away from a hugging match, Johnson floored Jeffries with a left on the chin. The big man sat helplessly on his haunches, the lower rope bending beneath his great weight as he leaned upon it.

He pulled himself together laboriously and stood up. He was a mark for the darky's blows, another swift left sending him nearly through the ropes. This time he was in reality counted out, but he gained his feet almost simultaneously with the expiration of the tenth second.

Ridding his mouth of an accumulation of blood, Jeffries reeled heavy-legged toward the opposite side of the platform. Johnson, watchful and confident, hopped after him and as Jeffries squared around with his back touching the ropes, a double-handed punch, a right and left, caught the huge white man around the lower end of the face. Again Jeffries sprawled his length upon the floor. As he tried to gather his limbs beneath him his action were those of a drunken man, and Sam Berger, seeing that poor Jim was utterly helpless, hopped on the ring floor and with a wave of his arm acknowledged defeat for his principal. Referee then pointed to Johnson. At this time only eight seconds had elapsed, but Johnson will receive the credit of a knockout. It is the law of the ring that if anyone intervenes when a knockout is imminent, a knockout is recorded.

The finish differed from the finishes of the championship fights that I have seen. There was one yelp when Jeffries was tumbled the first time, just as there is when the end of any ring event is in sight. Then those who yelled seemed to suddenly remember that a negro was beating down a white man.

Jeffries never had a look in as those who are given to slang say. Johnson proved his master even in clinches, although I couldn't see that there was ever a determined test of pulling and hauling strength such as there was when Jeffries and Sharky got together in Mechanics' Pavilion, San Francisco, many years ago. Those who have seen Jeffries at work in his gymnasium and had heard reports as to the cyclonic manner in which Jeffries intended to charge down upon Johnson, were eager to notice the first real bodily clinch.

It came in the very first round, but Jeffries did not throw a leg behind to brace himself and attempt to exert his power. Maybe he discovered that the man in front of him was at least his equal in strength, and, for that matter, his superior, in strength of arm.

Value of Married Friendship.

Possibly there would be more married lovers if men and women alike realized that marriage should not be a bar to friendship with the opposite sex. It is next to impossible that a wife should find in her husband, or husband find in his wife, every qualification for mental friendship, yet this does not mean that the wife may not consider her husband the only man in the world worth being married to, or the husband does not consider his wife to be the one mate he wanted.

Age of Niagara Falls.

To the question: "How old are the Niagara falls?" geologists have returned replies varying by tens of thousands of years. At first it was estimated that the Niagara river came into existence through changes in the level of the land around the great lakes about 55,000 years ago. Later this was reduced to only 12,000 years. Lyell increased the estimate again to 3,500 years, and still later other scientists lowered it to about 9,000 years.

USEFUL LIFE ENDED

CHIEF JUSTICE FULLER DIES AT SUMMER HOME.

HEART FAILURE THE CAUSE

Great Jurist Suddenly Stricken While Apparently In Good Health—Probable Reconstruction of the Supreme Court.

Washington.—Melville Weston Fuller, chief justice of the United States Supreme court, died suddenly of heart failure at his summer home in Sorrento, Me., five miles from Bar Harbor.

Dispatches from Beverly say that, while President Taft declined to commit himself definitely, it is regarded a practical certainty that Governor Hughes of New York will be the next chief justice.

News of the passing of Chief Justice Fuller came as a shock to everybody in Washington, on the very latest reports from him, despite his 77 years, contained no word of complaint or other hint that he was not in his usual condition of excellent health.

Only about two weeks ago Justice Fuller made his annual trip to Chicago to see friends and members of his family and to look after his business interests there, which are considerable.

Important Cases Pending.

As the news spread rapidly through the capital the response from all sources was one of surprise and sorrow, followed by opinions as to the effect which the death of the chief justice would have upon the important cases now pending in the Supreme court.

Probably never in the history of the Supreme court has that body had in hand as many cases of tremendous and far-reaching import as now are awaiting adjudication. How far the removal of the chief justice will complicate matters and how far the 'personal equation" and general point of view of his successor will affect the ultimate fate of the deep-lying national problems that now face the court are questions that are being discussed with deep interest in Washington to-night.

No Premonitory Symptoms.

Dispatches from Bar Harbor say the death of the chief justice was entirely unexpected as there had been no premonitory symptoms of any kind of trouble. The chief justice arrived at Sorrento June 25 from Chicago. He was not well in Chicago in June, but since coming to Sorrento his health apparently had been very good, considering his advanced age. He enjoyed a sermon the day before his death in the Church of the Redeemer (Episcopal) by Rev. James E. Freeman of Minneapolis, who has been a lifelong friend of the Fuller family. When Justice Fuller retired he was in excellent spirits, and not the slightest indication that there was serious trouble with his heart was observed by his daughter, Mrs. Nathaniel Francis of Washington, who was with him at the Fuller summer home.

Daughters Hears His Cry.

Mrs. Francis was awakened by a feeble cry from her father. Upon looking at him and hearing his words, "I am feeling very ill," she realized that he was in a serious condition. Dr. Phelps hurried over the three-mile stretch of road in an automobile, but failed to arrive until his patient was dead. Mrs. Francis also called in Rev. Mr. Freeman, who occupies a neighboring cottage, and he and Mrs. Francis were with the chief justice when he breathed his last.

Vacancies Close Together.

What will amount practically to a supreme court of the United States constructed by the hands of President Taft is rendered probable by the death of Chief Justice Fuller. In the year and a quarter of his term already passed President Taft has made two appointments to fill vacancies caused by death. The chief justiceship now to be filled marks the third vacancy caused by the same agency within a comparatively few months. If Associate Justice Moody retires under the special act of the recent session of congress granting him that privilege—as is expected—there will be two position to fill in the immediate future. This will make four Taft appointments to the supreme bench within the first half of his term in the White House. There are nine members of the court, and as the chances are at least even that another vacancy will occur before the expiration of the president's present term of office, the rare duty of naming a majority of the highest tribunal of the land is likely to fall to his lot.

The potentialities involved in this indicated reorganization of the court of last resort at a time when problems of development of which the constitutional fathers may not have dreamed are pressing for settlement, are regarded on every hand here as of the greatest importance.

He Had Been Observing.

"Why don't you call your invention the 'Bachelor's Button?'" I asked my friend, who was about to put on the market a button that a man could attach without needle or thread.

"I fear that the appellation would imply too much restrictiveness," he answered. "You see," he went on, giving me one of his knowing smiles, "I expect to do just as much business with the married men as with the bachelors."

Colorado Lands Richer Than Gold Mines

There are bigger profits in eastern Colorado in proportion to the cost of land than almost anywhere else. Colorado's agricultural products are more than double the value of its mines.

Irrigation is unnecessary. By deep plowing and continual shallow cultivation the soil never dries out during the growing season, making big crops and surprising profits on $5.00 to $20.00 land.

What Some Men Have Done

One man raised enough potatoes on 12 acres to buy 160 acres. Another man makes affidavit that he has not lost a crop in fifteen years.

Without irrigation one man's 800 cherry trees brought him $900. Five hundred plum trees produced $225. One hundred apple trees gave 300 bushels, $150; 1,400 currant bushes, three years old, yielded $225.

Hogs raised on alfalfa, fattened on corn (also raised on the same farm), cost $4 per head (including first cost of parent stock) and sell at top prices.

It's a great dairy and poultry country where dairy cows thrive on natural grasses.

The climate of eastern Colorado is the healthiest in the world. It makes healthy families and prolific crops. Good churches, good schools and splendid markets close at hand.

Combine business with pleasure. Enjoy an inexpensive vacation among the Colorado Rockies and all these wonderful lands along the Rock Island line on the way. Now is the time to go. See for yourself what a delightful combination it is.

One Thousand Des Moines Men Lay Down Tools

RETURN TO WORK TUESDAY

Master Builders' and Unions' Arbitration Committee Failed to Reach Working Agreement Saturday—Out today.

Des Moines, July 11.—Failure of the master builders and the unions' arbitration committee to reach a working agreement at the conference held Saturday made certain the walkout of all affiliated union men employed by members of the Master Builders' association today. The Building Trades council will make good its threat to boycott the sixteen contractors of the association for their refusal to reinstate the locked out carpenters.

One thousand men, who are members of the twelve affiliated unions of the council, will lay down their tools. No union carpenters, cement workers, lathers, plasterers, painters, iron workers, tinners, building laborers, hoisting engineers, plumbers, pipe layers or sheet metal workers will be allowed by the council to work for members of the Master Builders' association until a final settlement of the trouble is effected.

Every construction job of importance in Des Moines will be tied up by the enforced idleness. The sixteen contractors involved in the labor war hold the contracts for all large buildings now in course of construction. By the action, work will be at a standstill on the new city hall, Securities building, Ewing flats, Majestic theater, Equitable building and many other important buildings.

Master builders and the arbitration committee of the Building Trades council effected a truce at a secret meeting held yesterday afternoon. There will be a general strike of the twelve affiliated crafts, but it will last only today. Tomorrow all union men employed by the master builders will return to their work pending arbitration of the difficulty, according to the announcement made last night.

ELKS LEAVE FOR DETROIT

Largest Delegation Ever Sent From Des Moines Chapter Attending Detroit Convention.

Des Moines, July 11.—Colorado Elks en route to Detroit invaded Des Moines Saturday night at 9:30 o'clock and from then until midnight, when they continued their journey to the grand reunion, created a din with tiny cowbells, big cowbells and a cowboy band.

The Colorado "Bills" came in on a special train and when they left the three car loads of Des Moines Elks bound for the grand lodge session also, were hooked on to the rear of the Colorado special.

The Missouri Elks were late in arriving and were not able to do any stirring around in the city. They planned on spending three hours in Des Moines, but could stay only a few minutes. They did not leave the vicinity of the depot. They were met by the Des Moines and Iowa Elks, however, and entertained during the short stopover.

Great preparations had been made by the local Elks to take care of the out-of-the-state "Bills" during their stay in the city. The visiting brothers were met at the depot and escorted to the club house, where they were given a royal reception.

Then the cowboy band, headed by Jack Sinclair of Pueblo, took to the streets, heading a procession of hundreds of Elks. Added to the music of the band was the tinkling of hundreds of little bells, given to the Colorado Elks by the Omaha lodge. Herman Huttenlocker of the Des Moines lodge, not to be outdone by the Omaha Elks donated to the leader, the monster cowbell which "Unser Herman" has been jealously guarding in his "smoke shop" for years.

A BURNING ERUPTION FROM HEAD TO FEET

"Four years ago I suffered severely with a terrible eczema, being a mass of sores from head to feet and for six weeks confined to my bed. During that time I suffered continual torture from itching and burning. After being given up by my doctor I was advised to try Cuticura Remedies. After the first bath with Cuticura Soap and application of Cuticura Ointment I enjoyed the first good sleep during my entire illness. I also used Cuticura Resolvent and the treatment was continued for about three weeks. At the end of that time I was able to be about the house, entirely cured, and have felt no ill effects since. I would advise any person suffering from any form of skin trouble to try the Cuticura Remedies, as I know what they did for me. Mrs. Edward Nenning, 1112 Salina St., Watertown, N. Y., Apr. 11, 1909."

"Do you know," said a little boy of five to a companion the other day, "my father and I know everything. What I don't know my father knows, and what my father don't know I know."

"All right! Let's see, then," replied the older child, skeptically. "Where's Asia?"

It was a stiff one, but the youngster never faltered.

"Well, that," he answered coolly, "is one of the things my father knows."—Harper's Bazaar.

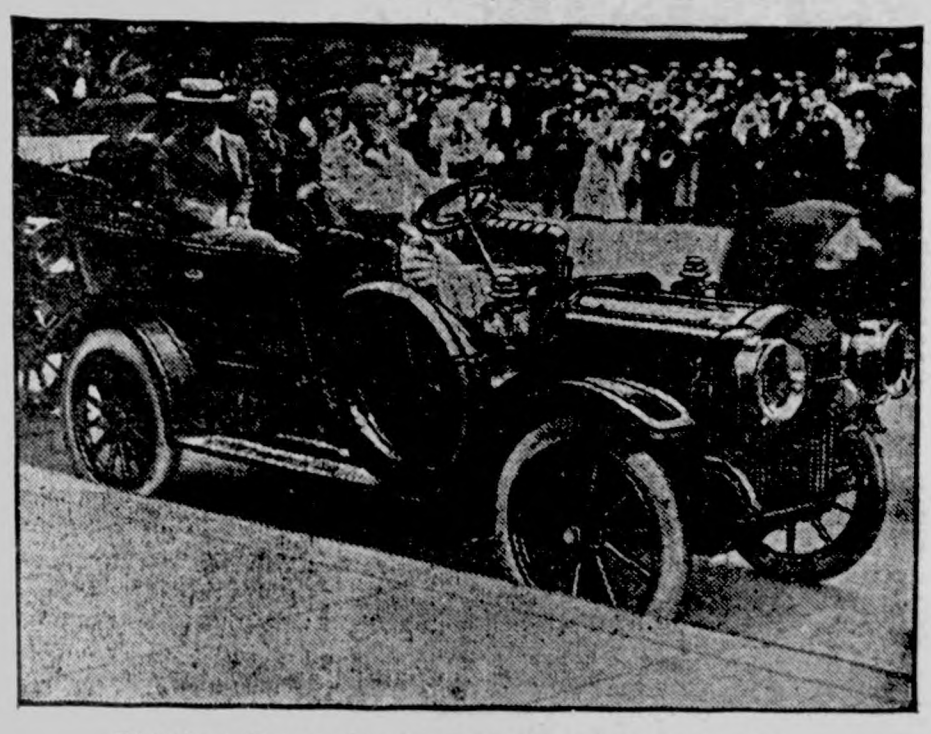
The Mighty Traveler Goes Buoyantly Through a Long and Trying Reception-Parade, Showing Lively Interest in Everything American

The White Company Receives Unique Compliment for the Sturdy Reliability of Its Steam Car From Mr. Roosevelt and Family



Theodore Roosevelt and Party in White Steamer.)

After fifteen months absence, exactly as scheduled, Colonel Theodore Roosevelt disembarked from the Kaiserin Auguste Victoria, Saturday morning, June 18, at 11 a. m. To the keen disappointment of a large group of newspaper correspondents, Mr. Roosevelt absolutely refused, as heretofore, to be interviewed or to talk on political subjects, but his rapid fire of questions showed the same virile interest in public affairs as before.

If the welcome tendered by the vast throng may be considered a criterion upon which to base a "return from Elba," surely there was no discordant note in the immense reception-parade, nor in the wildly clamorous crowd which cheered at every glimpse and hung on his very word.

The incidents of the day in New York were many, but perhaps none better illustrated the nervous energy and vitality of the man, the near-mania to be up-and-doing, which he has brought back to us, than the discarding of horses and carriages for the swifter and more reliable automobiles. The moment the Roosevelt family and immediate party landed, they were whisked away in White Steamers to the home of Mrs. Douglas Robinson at 433 Fifth avenue. A little later, when the procession reached the corner of Fifty-ninth street and Fifth avenue, Colonel Roosevelt again showed his preference for the motor car in general and the White cars in particular, when he, Cornelius Vanderbilt and Collector Loeb transferred from their carriage to White Steamers, which were in waiting for them.

After luncheon at Mr. Robinson's house, the entire party, including Colonel Roosevelt, again entered White cars and were driven to Long Island City, where they were to take a special train to the ex-President's home at Oyster Bay.

The supremacy of the White cars with the Roosevelt party was again demonstrated on Sunday, when the party was driven to church in the White Steamers, and a group of some forty prominent Rough Riders were taken in a White Gasoline Truck to a clambake at the Travers island clubhouse of the New York Athletic Club.

Silence!

The instinct of modesty natural to every woman is often a great hindrance to the cure of womanly diseases. Women shrink from the personal questions of the local physician which seem indelicate. The thought of examination is abhorrent to them, and so they endure in silence a condition of disease which surely progresses from bad to worse.

THE IOWA SILO

Two years ago the agricultural engineering section of the Iowa Experiment Station invented a new kind of silo which was called the Iowa silo. This silo is built of specially made hollow tile. It is as permanent as a cement silo, and much easier to construct. It costs no more than the best grade of stave silo and will last several times as long.

Since this silo was first devised thirteen have been constructed in various parts of the state. A careful account was kept of actual cost of construction. The manner in which the silage kept was also watched carefully. Without exception these silos are proving satisfactory.

Bulletin 117 of the Iowa Experiment Station has just been received from the press. It gives complete figures on the cost of the thirteen Iowa silos that have been constructed. Complete directions for putting up an Iowa silo are given. By following these, any mason, or any farmer who has had any experience with brick or cement work, can put up a satisfactory silo.

The bulletin is free and may be had by applying to Director C. F. Curtiss, Ames, Iowa.

THE WRECK MASTER.

He Does Some Tall Hustling When the Line Is Blocked.

When a wreck blocks the line the wreck master is the biggest man on the railroad. Even the president, if by unhappy chance he happens to be there, steps aside and keeps silent after the wreck train halts with a jerk of grinding brakes and hissing air before the indescribable confusion of shattered wood and twisted steel which clutter the tracks. The wreck master's feet are on the ground before the shrieking wheels have ceased turning. There follow at his heels a half score of men, all experts, but of less degree than their leader.

He shouts an order that seems as unintelligible as a drillmaster's command, then another and another. There is instant action. At one end of the train a locomotive begins to creep cautiously away with the coaches that have stayed on the rails. An express car up toward the forward end of the passenger train is tilted tremblingly on its trucks. It is loaded with bales of silk perhaps or with other costly merchandise. The wreckers do not stop to inquire. To them it is simply an obstruction that has to be removed immediately. There is a heaving chorus, and it plunges down the embankment. A hundred yards away a loaded freight car in the opposite train is hanging over the edge. Fifty crowbars give it a tip that sends it down to the foot of the hill. As it lands there is a crash of discordant, tortured strings, an inharmonious outburst as though half a hundred cats had landed simultaneously on half a hundred keyboards. "Pianos," remarks one of the panting workmen to another standing at his shoulder. They do not pause even to grin. An instant later they are heaving away at something else.—Thaddeus S. Dayton in Harper's Weekly.

WE RISE AND EXPLAIN

Bro. Brackett is displeased with the resolutions passed by the republican county convention. This is sad, inasmuch as he has assumed to tell the republicans on more than one occasion (through the columns of his democratic ? paper) who to nominate for the various offices and what was the proper caper in the way of platform planks, etc., and we really thought the republican resolutions passed at the county convention would meet with his approval. In the course of his remarks he says:

"Among other things they passed some resolutions a little difficult for one with a common school education and a little better to understand. Taft signed the Payne-Aldrich tariff bill and said it was a good—a very good tariff bill. They endorsed Taft. Cummins and Dolliver both voted against the Payne-Aldrich tariff bill; they endorsed them for so doing and said they were bully boys. As we before said, we just can't understand it, but assume it is a lack of education along republican lines. Bro. Flint appears to be the only newspaper man on that committee of resolutions and as they are expected to indict articles that everyone can understand we will invite him to rise and explain."

We are surprised that Bro. Brackett is unable to comprehend the meaning of the very plain English used in the resolutions, and especially in that part relating to Taft, Carroll and our Senators. The paragraph relating to our president and governor is as follows:

We endorse the republican administration insofar as the same has carried out progressive principles and the provisions of the Republican platform. We pledge our support to William H. Taft and B. F. Carroll in every effort which they may make to secure the enactment of legislation in the interest of all the people.

The editor of the Democrat is probably the only person in the county who cannot understand the above, so we will "explain" for his benefit.

First—Hancock county is progressive republican in politics.

Second — The progressives were in control of the recent republican county convention.

Third—Nothing that Taft or Carroll have done in their official capacity was endorsed, excepting that which "carried out progressive principles," and support was pledged them "in every effort which they may make to secure the enactment of legislation in the interest of all the people." When Taft and Carroll do this they are in line with Senators Cummins and Dolliver.

As newspaper men are supposed to indict articles that everyone can understand, so also are they supposed to be able to understand articles indicted by others when the language used is as plain as is that employed in the resolutions adopted at the recent republican county convention.

Capital and Labor may war, trusts may flourish and small dealers go to the wall, but the man who owns his land and draws his livlihood from the soil is independent. He doesn't need to worry.

There is no security on the market today as safe for the farmer to buy as good agricultural land.

Put your money in land. It is the safest investment known. You will then own and control your own investment; no dishonest or careless officer can lose your money; it cannot burn up; the broad acres won't run away.

Our farms are in the best agricultural section, where lands are steadily increasing in value.

We are owners and are continually purchasing large tracts of agricultural lands and always have on hand suitable farms for the actual settler or a suitable tract for the speculator. It is our effort to buy only such lands as are practical for actual farming. Our customers who purchased lands from us have uniformly and without exception made money. DEATH GUARD STRICT

Murderer John Junkin Said to Be Near Nervous Collapse

MAY BE CARRIED TO GALLOWS

Sheriff John G. Clark Will Spring Trap Under Ottumwa Negro Who Is to Be Hanged July 29 for Murder of Clara Rosen.

Centerville.—John Junkin will have to be carried to the gallows in a nervous collapse is the prediction freely made since the return of Sheriff J. G. Clark from Fort Madison, where he had been making preliminary arrangements for the hanging July 29, when John Junkin will pay the penalty for the murder of Clara Rosen at Ottumwa.

Junkin is kept in solitary confinement, entirely away from the public, and the guards have noted a change coming over him as execution day approaches. He is becoming more nervous, something similar to his state of mind when in the Appanoose county jail the few days before his trial a year ago. Then he almost collapsed for fear of a mob.

JOHN JUNKIN.

Death Guard Is Strict.

Every precaution is being taken at the prison to see that Junkin does not cheat the gallows by taking his life before the day set for the hanging. Guards are careful that nothing gets to him that he might use. It is believed that as the day approaches fear of the gallows will become perfect torture to him. At the time of his trial the only thing that affected him was when there appeared to be danger threatening his person. And his guards then predicted that he would collapse before the day for hanging. They are expecting to hear any day that his present nervousness has culminated in total breakdown.

Clark Will Spring Trap.

"Yes, sir. I'll hang John Junkin," said Sheriff John G. Clark of Appanoose county, recently. "I have never said before that I would hang him, or that I would not. I didn't think that a subject to be making any particular claims about, but I have just been doing my duty as sheriff, and I propose to be found doing it July 29 next at Fort Madison. It will not be John Clark sending a poor human soul into eternity, but the majestic state of Iowa. I am its agent in carrying out the decree of twelve good men and true who sat on the jury and said he should hang. Then the supreme court said the verdict should stand, and the governor has not said otherwise, so I am ready to do the part which the law imposes upon me."

The law provides that at least three days before the execution the sheriff shall notify the judge who pronounced sentence, which is Judge M. A. Roberts of Ottumwa, the county attorney and clerk in this county, the sheriff of Wapello county, two physicians and twelve respectable citizens of the state to be selected by him, to be present as witnesses at the execution. At the request of the defendant two or more ministers of the gospel, and any relatives may attend, also such peace officers, magistrates and guards as the sheriff may deem proper.

Many Eager to See Hanging.

Widespread curiosity exists to see the hanging. Letters come pouring in on Sheriff Clark in nearly every mail now, and some were received weeks ago, asking to be in the party. In one letter from Ottumwa was a list of twenty-one names.

The family of the murdered girl want to see him hang, and Sheriff Clark proposes to see that they have that opportunity if so desired. Their names are included in a list of twenty-one sent from Ottumwa by one of the attorneys somewhat connected with the case. In this list are Dr. J. A. Hull, Dr. L. Torrence, Dr. S. L. Hauch, F. A. Rosen, Fred Rosen, C. O. Rosen, G. O. Nelson, C. V. Nelson, W. Webster, J. B. Hammond, J. M. Shindley, W. C. Wyman, W. R. Daggett, J. E. Hull, G. B. Niblack, E. R. Mitchell, C. W. McCart, A. G. Cook, Frank Harris and Pete Gallagher.

History of the Case.

The crime committed by Junkin was one of the most cold blooded in the history of the state. He seized Miss Rosen as she was returning from church in Ottumwa, on February 5, 1909, dragged her into a vacant lot, attempted a criminal assault, then crushed in her head with a rock and cruelly mutilated her body.

During the trial of the case in the Appanoose district court before Judge M. A. Roberts, attorneys for Junkin made no denial of the latter's guilt. They conceded that he deserved great punishment, but urged to the jury that he was a moral pervert and degenerate and that the life sentence should be imposed, not the death penalty.

The plea failed to deter the jury in speedily returning a verdict finding Junkin guilty of murder in the first degree and recommending that the death sentence be imposed by the judge. Judge Roberts followed this recommendation without hesitancy.

On the appeal to the high court Junkin's attorneys used the same line of argument as they did in the lower court, but the supreme court could not view the case in the same light as did the counsel for Junkin, neither could the supreme court satisfy itself that Junkin was so low and degenerate of such a type that he could not distinguish between right and wrong.

The supreme court is of the opinion that a jury of twelve men sitting in judgment upon a man will not inflict the death penalty unless there is cause for it and in the most flagrant cases.

Junkin Confessed.

Following the murder of Clara Rosen, Junkin was arrested and placed in the Wapello county jail at Ottumwa. When the news of his arrest spread over Ottumwa mobs of enraged citizens gathered and threatened to lynch him.

Fearing this mob the officers rushed Junkin away under cover of night to Albia where he was placed in the county jail there. Here it was that a confession was secured from Junkin. When it was reported back to Ottumwa that Junkin had confessed another mob formed and hastened to Albia but the officers had spirited Junkin away to Des Moines where he was incarcerated in the Polk county jail.

MISS CLARA ROSEN.
Ottumwa Girl Murdered by John Junkin.

So bitter was the feeling in Ottumwa and Wapello county, and even in the surrounding counties against Junkin, that a change of venue was taken from the Wapello district court to the Appanoose district court, and the trial had there.

During the trial of the case the Ottumwans became excited again and threats of mob violence was rife. Junkin was heavily guarded all during the trial, being kept in the tower of the court house as an extra precaution.

The only thing that can now save Junkin from hanging on that day and thus paying the complete penalty for the murder of Clara Rosen at Ottumwa, Feb. 5, 1909, will be the clemency of Governor Carroll. Unless he specifically interferes the day of execution will remain as first set by Judge Roberts. Should the governor postpone it then he will set the day. The general supposition is that the law will take its full course without delay.

Capital punishment was abolished in Iowa in 1872, and restored in 1878 by act of the Eighteenth General Assembly.

It is stated that there has been no execution in Iowa since 1895, except Joseph C. Smith who was hanged at Fort Madison, April 20, 1906, for the murder of his sweetheart, a negress

The postmasters of the Des Moines district took the first steps to make Iowa the first state west of the Mississippi to start a movement for the civil service plan. It is understood that a number of the other eleven districts in the state are in favor of the plan.

Resolutions favoring a local parcels post and the postal savings bank law also were adopted and a resolution asking all postmasters of the district to attend the next district meeting which will be held in this city some time in July 1911.

Postal Gain for Year Is Record.

Des Moines postoffice receipts for the year ending June 30 were $5,000 greater than the gain the preceding year, and totaled $75,981.34, an increase that puts Iowa's big city in the same class as many cities of much greater population. The total receipts for the year were $764,048.13 as against $688,067.49 for the preceding year, so Postmaster Myerly reports. The receipts for the month of June were $61,406.98 as against $,943.06 for the corresponding month last year, an increase of about per cent.

The league now numbers about ninety charter members.

Within the last two weeks, the 109 saloonists of Des Moines have paid $350 in quarterly payment of their tax into the office of county treasurer George L. Dobson. At $600 per annum, the 109 saloons in Des Moines pour a total of $65,400 into the coffers of the county traesurer.

George A. Jewett, a pioneer citizen of Des Moines, and his daughter, Mrs. Hugh G. Wepton, left for Boston to attend a reunion of the Jewett family. The Jewett family traces their ancestry back to 1611 in the history of America

MILLION IN STATE TREASURY.

Is $360,000 Over Amount at Close of Biennial Period in 1908.

Des Moines.—For the bi-ennial period ending June 30, 1910, with all warrants redeemed, there is in the state treasury a balance of $1,003,915.35, which is $359,726.18 more than the balance was at the close of the biennial period two years ago, or the beginning of the period just closed. The total receipts during the biennial period amounted to $8,388,280.93, while the total amount of warrants redeemed amounted to $8,028,554.75. This is the best showing the state treasury has made in some years.

The receipts were divided as follows:

From the counties—State revenues, $4,661,573.76; insane, $1,110,501.46; blind, $81,655; deaf, $91,494; feeble minded, $43,495.45; orphans' home, $58,868.86; inebriates, $34,328.32.

From insurance companies—Iowa companies, $1,045,553.63; United States companies, $510,190.18; foreign companies, $36,294.16.

From state offices and boards—Auditor, $172,134.44; clerk supreme court, $6,159.43; dairy commissioner, $22,894.49; entomologist, $2,314.50; pharmacy commission, $74,253.84; secretary of state, $443,009.95; superintendent of public instruction, $5,149; state medical examiners, $11,551.36; board of health, $12,166; dental examiners, $3,944; mine inspectors, $683.90; veterinary examiners, $2,913.50; freight lines and transportation companies, $14,726.61; itinerant doctors, $3,250; state institution refunds, $120,025.07; state institution miscellaneous, $110,730.95.

From miscellaneous sources—Interest bank deposits, $25,451.82; collateral inheritance tax, $447,179.40; transfer temporary school fund, $1,407.33; federal aid to soldiers' home, $132,436.37; other resources including fish and game, $191,847.65; teachers, $22,434.

Property Value Shows Increase.

Iowans accumulated over $7,000,000 more of personal property during the year 1909 than they did in the year 1908, according to figures prepared in the office of Auditor of State Bleakly and which were turned over to the state executive council for assessment purposes.

In the year 1908 the assessed valuation of the personal property of Iowans amounted to $125,994,108, while the assessed valuation of the personal property for 1909 is $133,749,307.

The assessed value of the real estate is $490,621,494 for 1909, which is not an increase of any extent over the 1908 figures for the reason that the assessment on real estate is changed only every two years and this year is the one in which the assessment is unchanged.

Figures have been secured on the new buildings erected during the year 1909, however, and the assessed valuation of these is $15,357,542.

His Claim to Prominence.

At a social gathering a certain man, intent on knowing every one, was introduced to Senator Julius C. Burrows of Michigan.

"The name Burrows is very familiar to me," he said. "I am certain that you are a man of some prominence."

"Yes," replied Senator Burrows, "I am the man that 'died at first' just before Casey came to bat in that celebrated ball game in Mudville."—Success Magazine.

The SPECTRAL GAMBLER

It was in February, 1881. I was spending the winter season at San Remo and lived in a fine room on the second floor of the Hotel Europe. I used to visit Monte Carlo repeatedly and to play roulette and usually with the same result. I returned to San Remo with empty pockets.

One evening I came back from such an excursion and went to bed with fixed conclusions never again to try the roulette.

Everything in my room was as usual. At the side of my bed stood a little table with a marble top and on this was a china candlestick. At the bottom of the candle and on the top of the candlestick was a round piece of glass through which the candle was stuck.

I noticed that it was in good shape and had no crack when I put a new candle in.

I had a peculiar feeling when I was about to blow the light out. I smelled the smoke of gunpowder and had the idea as if somebody was in the room.

I looked everywhere and could not find anything suspicious or any trace of smoke, and laughing about my own foolishness, I lay down to sleep. But although I was very tired I could not sleep, and half awake and half dreaming, I saw the roulette table before me and many players around it.

One individual, a man who looked like an army officer, attracted my attention. He was pale as a ghost and seemed to try hard to hide his nervousness. He continuously turned the ends of his mustache and when he made his play and placed his money, and the croupier had taken it away he smiled grimly and finally having apparently lost his last five franc piece he rose and left the table.

Then I fell asleep. I dreamed that the man whom I had seen was in my room and looking at me sternly. I saw a little hole in his forehead and a drop of blood coming out of it.

Suddenly I woke up. I had heard the sound of falling glass. I made a light and found the glass piece which had been on the candlestick broken in two pieces on the marble plate of the little table. I wondered how this could have happened, as the candlestick was not thrown over by me while I was sleeping and the candle was still sticking in it.

On the next morning I met a friend, a German count, who had a nice villa in the outskirts of the city.

I told him my experience, and he found it very peculiar. Of course I did not tell him of my vision of the roulette table and about my dream.

In a joking kind of way he remarked: "Well, I think the Polish army officer who committed suicide in your room a fortnight ago is probably to blame for the broken glass. He went broke in Monte Carlo and probably wanted to break something in return."

I did not say anything further about the matter, but when I came to my room I investigated the little table carefully and lifted the marble plate. To my surprise I found eight numbers written upon the bottom of it.

Should the dream, the breaking of the glass and the finding of the numbers have a connection? I copied the numbers and went to Monte Carlo to play them.

But I was ashamed of myself, and did not put a silver piece on the table.

The croupier called out "No. 16." That was the first number on my paper slip. I smiled; an accident, I thought. Then came No. 2, the second number on my slip. I was surprised and became so nervous that I could not move. The third number of my slip came, and in succession the rest of the eight.

Now, I was overcome by the thought of having missed the chance to win a fortune.

When I slept in my room the following night I saw the Polish officer again in my dream, and, smilingly extending his hand to me, he said: "Well done, young man. Resist all temptation and let the game alone."

I could not touch a card any more, and once when I was to join in a poker game I felt a cold hand holding mine, and I excused myself. I hope the poor soul of the suicide may have found its rest.

The Times family enjoyed a visit Sunday afternoon at the beautiful farm home of Mr. and Mrs. Asa Gibbs, southeast of town. These good people have one of the finest and best improved farms in this part of the country, and they have spent twenty nine years of their lives in working this place and bringing it to a state of near perfection as a modern farm. The buildings are all modern and complete and the barns house some of the finest live stock in the county. One could travel many miles and not find another herd to equal Mr. Gibbs' fine bunch of Short-Horn and Hereford cattle. Everything about the place shows the result of up to-date farming methods and careful management.

CORN CROP LAID BY

More General Showers Proved Boon in Many Sections

BANNER CORN CROP EXPECTED

Haying Has Progressed Under Favorable Conditions, and, While the Yield Is Below the Average the Quality Is Fine.

Des Moines, July 16.—Rain widely scattered over the state came last week to put the crops in excellent condition according to the statement of George M. Chappel, section director of the Iowa weather and crop service. Corn is practically all laid by, haying is progressing and all growing stands are in great condition, according to the bulletin which follows:

The weather during the past seven days has been ideal for haying, harvesting, and laying by the remainder of the corn crop; the general conditions being somewhat more favorable than during the previous week. The excessive temperature was not as great and showers were more general, although the rainfall was very light over the larger part of the state, and practically nil over the eastern counties until Saturday evening. Copious to heavy and well distributed showers occurred over the northwestern and north central districts on the 6th and on the 9th, and reports indicate much improvement in crop conditions in those sections. While the drouth has continued over the larger part of the state, corn and small grain have made considerable advancement. Small grain is filling and ripening nicely except in a few localities where the drouth has been of long duration. Corn has made rapid growth and shows little or no effect of dry weather. It has, however, reached that stage of development where it will require more moisture to keep up its normal growth than it has had in the past few weeks. Good progress has been made in haying and the conditions have been favorable for securing an excellent quality of hay, although the yield is below the average. The bulk of the winter wheat is in shock and many fields of barley and early oats have been cut, with prospects of fair to good yields and excellent quality of all small grain. Potatoes and pastures need rain badly.

The following is a summary of reports received from crop correspondents of the Iowa weather and crop service, showing the estimated conditions of staple crops July 1, 1910, as compared with the average condition on that date in past years: Corn, 89 per cent; winter wheat, 87; spring wheat, 92; oats, 92; rye, 92; barley, 90; flax, 85; hay, 68; pastures, 70; potatoes, 86; popcorn, 92; sweet corn, for can, 89; apples, 6; plums, 4; grapes, 30.

Condition July 1, 1909: Corn, 92 per cent; winter wheat, 96; spring wheat, 95; oats, 91; rye, 96; barley, 94; flax, 94; hay, 100; pastures, 103; potatoes, 100; apples, 76; plums, 68; grapes, 85.

July 1 average of the past ten years: Corn, 90 per cent; winter wheat, 94; spring wheat, 93; oats, 90; rye, 95; barley, 93; flax, 92; hay, 90; pastures, 88; potatoes, 98.

Newton Phone War Ended.

Newton.—A compromise measure adopted at a special session of the city council ended the telephone war that has been in progress here since the Jasper County Telephone company announced early in the spring that increased rates would go into effect July 1. The compromise provides that the company shall operate under its present franchise until its expiration April 1, 1911, and that the following schedule of rates shall be maintained for the next three years

Private residence lines, $1.25; all party lines, $1.00; offices, $2.25; business houses, $2.50.

These rates are higher than those provided for under the present franchise, but lower than those the company has been attempting to enforce since the first of July.

When the company announced it would operate under the Iowa franchise in order to enforce the new rates, the city began injunction proceedings in the district court, but was checked by counter action by the company in federal court.

The city then began casting about for a compromise and the action taken Monday was the result.

Say Herriman Planned Swindles.

Council Bluffs, Ia.—That Russell B. Herriman, one of three of the indicted Mabray organization who have been resisting extradition to Council Bluffs, and who died in the county hospital at Oakland, Cal., a few days ago, was really the brains of the Mabray organization, it is said, and is generally believed to have been its treasurer.

Herriman was a man of extraordinary talents. In his younger days, he was a trusted secret service officer, working for the United States government in France, where he effected many arrests for smuggling in addition to aiding in the collection of large sums in customs that otherwise would have been lost to the government. He was finely educated and came of a fine family in New York state and was a wit and bon vivant.

After months of fighting in the California courts Herriman, Moore and Brown were placed in jail pending the result of an appeal to the United States court, being unable to give the $6,000 in bonds required by the court.

A special term of court it is expected will be held this summer by Federal Judge McPherson for Brown, Moore and others who were not under arrest at the time of the former trial, here three months ago. Herriman was credited with having evolved a scheme of swindles which brought so many thousands of dollars into the coffers of the Mabray organization.

Attorney Badly Beaten.

Oxford.—J. J. McCue, an attorney of this city, was badly beaten by Lemon Fleuzuer and afterward hanged in effigy by a mob of infuriated citizens on the principal street.

The provocation for the attack on McCue was a question which he asked Mrs. Fleuzuer, who was a witness in an adultery case, and which her husband and the spectators deemed improper.

Immediately after a recess was taken, Fleuzuer attempted to strike McCue in open court, but was prevented by friends. Later the two met on a street corner and Fluezuer struck McCue several times. The crowd which gathered there took up a collection to pay Fleuzuer's fine, and on the principal street burned McCue in effigy. On a banner suspended over the figure were these words: "You have received the first degree, watch out for the second."

J. J. Hall and Mrs. Cora Michler were the defendants in the adultery case, the trial of which caused the trouble. Testimony was introduced tending to show that Mrs. Hall had entered Mrs. Michler's home and found some of her husband's wearing apparel. Their arrest followed, and they are now in jail at Iowa City, unable to furnish the required bond. Mrs. Michler is the mother of three children. Hall also has three children.

Machine Shop for Albia.

Albia.—This city is to have a new machine shop and factory to cost in the neighborhood of $20,000. John Z. Evans is back of the factory. At a special session of the Albia Business Men's association it was arranged to give encouragement by offering free taxes and free water for ten years. Following such an announcement Mr. Evans came forward with the statement that the work of getting the factory established in the city would be commenced immediately.

Factories in Town Limits.

Fort Dodge.—Although the big brick and tile companies objected to being brought within city limits, Lehigh, at a special election, has extended the city limits. The town is now one and one-fourth miles square and has an increase of about 800 inhabitants. The management of the brick plants objected to being subjected to extra taxation. Five plants and two coal mine were taken in. The vote on the proposition was 115 to 110.

Railway Men Meet at Belle Plaine.

He declared that there were a large number of accidents in Iowa and urged the men not to take any chances by violating the rules.

Onawa Man Kills Woman; Suicides

New Water Works for Logan.

The LITTLE BROWN JUG at KILDARE

SYNOPSIS.

Thomas Ardmore and Henry Maine would stumble upon intrigue when the governors of North and South Carolina are reported to have quarreled. Both states are in a turmoil over one Appleweight, an outlaw with political influence. Griswold allies himself with Barbara Osborne, daughter of the governor of South Carolina, while Ardmore espouses the cause of Jerry Dangerfield, daughter of the governor of North Carolina. These ladies are trying to fill the shoes of their fathers, while the latter are missing. Unaware of each other's position, Prof. Griswold and Ardmore set out to capture the other prosecute. Ardmore organizes a big hunt. Griswold's men capture Appleweight. Jerry Dangerfield discovers the captive and leads him to Ardsley, her own prisoner. Griswold and Barbara explore the scene of the disappearance and meet Ardmore and Jerry. Griswold refuses to recognize his friend.

CHAPTER XIV.—Continued.

Griswold's companion spoke to him earnestly in a low tone for a moment, and then Griswold addressed Ardmore decisively.

"I don't know what you pretend to be, sir; but it may interest you to know that I am the governor of South Carolina!"

"And this gentleman," cried Jerry, pointing to Ardmore with her riding-crop, "though his hair is mussed and his scarf visibly untied, is none other than the governor of North Carolina, and he is not only on his own property but in the sovereign state of which he is the chief executive."

Prof. Griswold lifted his hat with the least flourish.

"I congratulate the state of North Carolina on having reposed authority in hands so capable. If this young lady is correct, sir, I will serve official notice on you that I have reason to believe that a person named Appleweight, a fugitive from justice, is hiding on your property and in your state, and I now formally demand that you surrender him forthwith."

"If I may introduce myself," interposed Jerry, "I will say to you that my name is Geraldine Dangerfield, and that this Appleweight person is now at Mr. Ardmore's house."

"I suppose," replied Miss Osborne with gentle irony, "that he has the pink parlor and leads the conversation at table."

"You are quite mistaken," replied Ardmore; "but if it would afford you any satisfaction to see the outlaw you may look upon him in my wine cellar, where, only an hour ago, I left him sitting on a case of Chateau Bizet '82. My further intentions touching this scoundrelly South Carolinian I need not now disclose; but I give you warning that the Appleweight issue will soon and forever be terminated and in a manner that will greatly redound to the credit and the glory of the Old North State."

"I trust," said Griswold, "that the prisoner, whom we cannot for a moment concede to be the real Appleweight, will not be exposed to scarlet fever, pending a settlement of this matter. And now, I have the honor to bid you both good morning."

He and Barbara swung their horses around and retraced their way, leaving Ardmore and Jerry gazing after them.

When the shabby beasts from the stable at Turner Court House had borne Miss Osborne and Griswold out of sight beyond the bungalow, Ardmore turned blankly to Jerry.

"Have I gone blind or anything? Unless I'm crazy that was dear old Grissy, but who is that girl?"

"That is Miss Barbara Osborne, and I hope she has learned such a lesson that she will not be snippy to me any more, if she is the president general of the Daughters of the Seminole War."

"But where do you suppose she found Grissy?"

"I don't know, I'm sure; nor, Mr. Ardmore, do I care."

"He said he represented the state of South Carolina—do you suppose the governor has really employed him?"

"I do not," said Jerry emphatically; for he appears intelligent, and intelligence is something that would never appeal to Gov. Osborne. It is quite possible," mused Jerry aloud, "that Miss Osborne's father has disappeared like mine, and she is running his office with Mr. Groswold's aid. If so, we shall probably have some fun before we get through with this."

"If that's true we shall have more than fun!" exclaimed Ardmore, thoroughly aroused. "You don't know Grissy. He's the smartest man alive, and if he's running this Appleweight case for Gov. Osborne, he'll keep us guessing."

"I wish you to remember, Mr. Ardmore, that you still have your opportunity, and that I expect you to carry this matter through to a safe conclusion and to the honor of the Old North State."

"I have no intention of failing, Miss Dangerfield;" and with this they turned and rode slowly back toward the house.

Prof. Griswold and Miss Osborne were silent until the forest again shut them in.

Then, in a sequestered spot, Griswold suddenly threw up his head and laughed long and loud

"Do you suppose they really have Appleweight?" asked Barbara.

"Not for a minute! They told us that story merely to annoy us when they found what we were looking for. That touch about the wine cellar is characteristically Ardmoresque. If they had Appleweight you may be sure they wouldn't keep him on the premises."

"Do You Suppose They Really Have Appleweight?"

Whereupon they rode back to Turner Court House much faster than they had come.

CHAPTER XV.

The Prisoner in the Corn-Crib.

Jerry and Ardmore sat at a long table in the commodious Ardsley library, which was a modification of a Gothic chapel. A large accumulation of mail from the governor's office at Raleigh had been forwarded, and Jerry insisted that it must be opened and disposed of in some way. Gov. Dangerfield was, it appeared, a subscriber to a clipping bureau, and they had been examining critically a batch of cuttings relating to the New Orleans incident.

"It's a good thing we got hold of Collins," observed Ardmore, putting down a clipping from a New York paper in which the reports of Gov. Dangerfield's disappearance were analyzed and tersely dismissed; "for he knows how to write and he's done a splendid picture of your father on his throne attending to business; and his little stingers for Osborne are the work of a genius."

"There's a certain finish about Mr. Collins' lying that is refreshing," replied Jerry, "and I cannot help thinking that he has a brilliant future before him if he enters politics. Nothing pains me more than a careless, ill-considered, silly lie, which is the best that most people can do. But it would be very interesting to know whether Gov. Osborne has really disappeared, or just how your friend the Virginia professor has seized the reins of state. Do you suppose he got a jug from somewhere, and met Miss Osborne and—"

"Do you think—do you think—she may have—er possibly—closed one eye in his direction?" asked Ardmore dubiously.

"Mr. Ardmore"—and Jerry pointed at him with a bronze paper-cutter to make sure of his attention—"Mr. Ardmore, if you ever imply again by act, word or deed that I winked at you I shall never, never speak to you again. I should think that a man with a nice sister like Mrs. Atchison would have a better opinion of women than you seem to have. I never saw you until you came to my father's house to tell me about the jug—and you know I didn't. And as for that Barbara Osborne, while I don't doubt that even in South Carolina a Daughter of the Seminole War might wink at a gentleman in a moment of extreme provocation, I doubt if she did, for she lacks animation, and has no more soul than a gum overshoe."

The discussion ceased abruptly on the appearance of Big Paul, the forester.

"A body of South Carolina militia is marching across country from the south. One of my men heard of it down at Turner Court House last night and rode to where the troops were encamped. He learned that it was a practice march for the militia. There's several companies of infantry, so he reports, and a piece of artillery."

"Bully for old Grissy!" exclaimed Ardmore. "They're coming this way, are they, Paul?" And the three bent over the map.

"This is the place sir. They seem to be planning to get around Turner's without stirring up the town. But it would take a good deal to wake up Turner's," laughed the big German.

Jerry placed her finger on the state line.

"If they dare cross that—if they as much as dare!"

"If they dare we shall show them a few things. Take all the men you need, Paul, to watch their movements. That will do."

The forester lingered.

"You remember that we spoke the other day of the log house on Raccoon creek, where the Appleweights had driven off our man?"

"Yes, Paul. It is where the state line crosses the heavy woods and the farthest outpost, so to speak, on my property. Also you said some of these Appleweight fellows had been cutting off the timber down there, if I remember rightly."

"Yes, sir," replied the forester, twirling his cap awkwardly. "But some of the people on the estate have said—"

He broke off in an embarrassment so unlike him that Jerry and Ardmore looked at him curiously.

"Well, Paul, what's the matter? If the cabin has been burned down it's no serious matter."

"Why, sir; some of the men passing there at night say they see lights and hear sounds in the cabin, though no one from the estate goes there. A child died in the house last spring and—well, you know how some of these people are!"

"Cheer up, Paul. We have bigger business on hand than the chasing of ghosts just now. When we get through with these other things I'll go over there myself and take a look at the spook."

As Paul hurried away, Jerry seized a pen and wrote this message:

Rutherford Gillingwater,
Adjutant-General, Camp Dangerfield,
Azbell, N. C.:

Move all available troops by shortest route to Kildare at once. and report to me personally at Ardsley. Make no statements to newspapers. Answer.

DANGERFIELD,
Governor.

"I guess that will bring him running," said Ardmore, calling a servant and ordering the message dispatched immediately.

Before luncheon a message was received from Gillingwater, to this effect:

Gov. William Dangerfield,
Ardsley, N. C.:

En route with our entire available force in the field. I am riding ahead with all speed, and will report at Ardsley at nine o'clock. Is full military dress de rigueur?

Gillingwater,
Adjutant-General.

"Isn't that just like Rutherford! He's afraid he won't be dressy enough; but if he knew that the South Carolina troops might shoot holes in his uniform he wouldn't be due here for a couple of weeks, instead of at nine o'clock;" and Jerry laughed merrily.

They debated more seriously this telegram from Collins at Raleigh sent the previous evening:

Can't maintain this bluff much longer. Even the friendly newspapers are growing suspicious. State credit jeopardized by disappearance of Treasurer Foster. Billings, of Bronx Loan and Trust, here in a great fury over bond matter. Do you know governor's whereabouts?

"Things are certainly growing more exciting," was Ardmore's comment. "I suppose even a gifted liar like Collins can't muzzle the press forever."

"You can't go on fooling all North Carolina all the time, either," said Jerry, "and I suppose when papa gets tired of being scared he will turn up in Raleigh and tell some plausible story about where he has been and what has happened. When it comes to being plausible no one can touch papa."

"Maybe he's dead," suggested Ardmore gloomily.

"That's a real inspiration on your part, Mr. Ardmore; and it's very sweet of you to mention it, but I have no idea that any harm has come to papa. It's too much trouble to get elected governor, without dying in office, and besides, papa is none too friendly with the lieutenant governor and would never think of allowing such a person to succeed him. But those bonds seem rather serious and I don't like the idea of your Mr. Billings making a fuss at Raleigh."

"That will be all right," remarked Ardmore, blotting the last of a number of telegrams which he had been writing, and pressing a button. "It's much more important for us to get Appleweight into a South Carolina jail; and it's not going to be so easy to do, now that Grissy is working on the other side, and angry at me about that scarlet fever telegram."

"There may be trouble," said Ardmore to his guests as they sat at luncheon. "But I should hate to have it said that my guests could not be taken care of here perfectly. I beg that you will all remain."

The luncheon was interrupted by the arrival of a summons for Ardmore, who hurriedly left the table.

Big Paul awaited him below, mounted and holding a led-horse.

King Granary.

The Crimea and the whole Black sea region, owing to the sparse population to consume it, had a great surplus of wheat. For centuries it was coveted by all hungry nations—and exploited by the one with the strongest armies. For centuries after Athens had feasted upon the grain-raising lands beyond the Bosphorus, Mithridates, as a preparation for his life and death contest with Rome, fell upon the corn fields of the Crimea. Because Sicily was yellow with wheat from earliest memory, through ages and ages she was raided by all the powers of the world. It was because of Egypt's corn, more plentiful than anywhere else along the Mediterranean, that Caesar and Pompey wanted the land of the Ptolemies. It was when Rome held or controlled the granaries—her first and dearest conquests—of Sicily, Sardinia, Spain and Egypt that she could become mistress of the world.

English Names in Ireland.

No wonder English surnames abound in Ireland, since as far back as 1485 an act was passed compelling the inhabitants of certain Irish counties to "gae appareled like Englishmen, and ware their heads after the English manner, sweare allegiance and take English surnames." This act directed every Irishman whom it concerned to "take to him an English surname of one towne, as Sutton, Chester, Trym, Skryne, Corke, Kinsale, or color, as White, Black, Browne; and that he and his issue shall use this name under payne of forfeiting of his goods yearly until the premises be done."

Not Proper Comparison.

The old darky had driven his fare to the hotel and was now demanding a dollar for his service. "What!" protested the passenger, "a dollar for that distance? Why, it isn't half a mile as the crow flies." "Dat's true boss," returned Sambo, with an appealing smile, "but y' see, suh, dat old crow he ain't got free wives an' ten chilluns to suppoht not to mention de keep foh de hoss."

Happiness means to be with nature, to see it, to commune with it.—Tolstoi.

TOUGH LUCK.

"Why, what's the matter, my lad?"

"Boo hoo! Ma sez I got to president when I grows up, an' I'd set my heart on bein' a prize fighter. Boo hoo!"

SOFT, WHITE HANDS

May Be Obtained in One Night.

For preserving the hands as well as for preventing redness, roughness, and chapping, and imparting that velvety softness and whiteness much desired by women Cuticura Soap, assisted by Cuticura Ointment, is believed to be superior to all other skin soaps. For those who work in corrosive liquids, or at occupations which tend to injure the hands, it is invaluable.

Treatment—Bathe and soak the hands on retiring in a strong, hot, creamy lather of Cuticura Soap. Dry and anoint freely with Cuticura Ointment, and in severe cases spread the Cuticura Ointment on thin pieces of old linen or cotton. Wear during the night old, loose gloves, or a light bandage of old cotton or linen to protect the clothing from stain. For red, rough, and chapped hands, dry, fissured, itching, feverish palms, and shapeless nails with painful finger ends, this treatment is most effective. Cuticura Remedies are sold throughout the world. Potter Drug & Chem. Corp., sole proprietors, Boston, Mass.

Alms and the Man.

"Sure Father Flaherty was a good man," Mr. Murphy said of the deceased parish priest. "He hated sin but he loved th' sinner, an' he was all compassion an' patience an' wisdom. There never was another loike 'im f'r holdin' up hope to th' poor batthered man that had anny desire f'r good.

"'Faith,' said he to Con Meehan, th' toime th' bh'y was down an' out, 'faith, this soide av paradise 'tist all beginning again, over an' over, an' tin toimes over!'

"An' that keen," continued Mr. Murphy, "'twas niver worth whoile to keep back part av th' price av th' land! Wid a twinkle in his eye he'd see clean through anny Ananias that iver walked.

"An' gin'rous!" Mr. Murphy's voice dropped to a lower key and his eyes were wet as he added, "His hand was always in his pockut, an' whin they prepared him f'r burial they found his right arm longer than his left wid stretchin' it out to th' poor."—Youth's Companion.

Their Object.

Banks—The women of my town have formed a secret society.

Rivers—A secret society? Surely, that's a misnomer; women don't know how to keep secrets.

Banks—But they know how to tell them, and that's why they formed the society.

LIVE PRIMITIVE LIFE

MEXICAN INDIANS TRUE CHILDREN OF NATURE.

Tribe In Sinaloa Has Made Little Progress Throughout the Centuries —Sustenance Consists Chiefly of Fruit—Easily Picked.

Sinaloa is a long state, comparable almost with Chile, as it lies along the west coast of Mexico, just as Chile lies along the Pacific shore of South America.

Like most new countries the most interesting part of this fertile state is its inhabitants, possibly because the country is so fertile. Game is abundant, easily caught, and the fruit of the great pithaya cactus is ripe almost from season to season. Every native, whether mounted or afoot—and most of them ride—carries a slender stick ten feet long, sharpened at one end and the point hardened with fire.

One supposes these sticks are a sort of primitive lance until one sees the Indian spear a cactus fruit from a branch seven or eight feet above his head. These pithayas contain many seeds and a little blood red pulp, all of which except the spines is food for the Indian.

All day long these Indian men wander through the jungle, a wall of green broken only here and there by the old trails of half wild cattle, gathering the cactus fruit. It would seem that some would be dried, or at least taken to the brush jacal, which represents home to the Indian; but no, he sits down and eats what he gathers immediately. If his wife wants any of the fruit she goes and gets it herself; she also gathers the food for the babies.

I was following one of the cactus gatherers in a winding cattle trail when I came suddenly on a little natural clearing. Here were half a dozen people seated on the ground, all working on wooden dishes, platter-shaped, and each large enough to hold an entire meal. The wood they were carving was freshly cut from the jungle trees, their tools were bits of old band iron, secured in the railroad junk heaps. It is only a few months, however, since these bits of iron have replaced the stone adzes of former years. The coming of the railroad less than a year ago brought the iron, and even yet the Indians attempt to sharpen their crude chisels by rubbing them on stones.

One Indian will take his blanket, a little parched corn and some dried meat, gather up all the iron tools, carry them six or seven miles back into the hills and stay there until he has sharpened all the tools of the entire village. The idea of bringing one of the flinty stones to the group of huts and thus saving the monthly trip has never come to these children of Sinaloa.—Forest and Stream.

Why Women Prefer It

When the newsboy comes through the train with the Chicago papers, watch the married couple across the aisle. If the man is a well-regulated husband, he will ask his wife which paper she prefers, and then you may lay odds that the one chosen will be the Record-Herald. There is no mystery about it. The man knows that he will find all the news in the Record-Herald, to be sure, but the woman knows it is the only paper that also gives adequate attention to the things in which women are specially interested. In every daily issue she can find a bill of fare for the day's three meals, reliable society news, good book reviews, Mme. Qui Vive's pungent comments on beauty questions, bright verses and jokes without vulgarity, a cartoon that anybody can enjoy and a fair share of the news of the day relating to women. Every Monday there is "Martha's Management," a very helpful column of culinary topics. In the Sunday edition a whole section is devoted to women, including Marion Harland's famous page, Mme. Qui Vive's vivacious columns, Jeanette Hope's fashions direct from Paris, Dame Curtsey's "Novelties in Entertainment" and many special articles of timely interest. Then there is the Sunday Magazine of the Record-Herald, a real magazine, full of good love stories and beautiful pictures. Do you wonder that women prefer the Record-Herald?

A GREAT HORSE

Sparkle, the wonderful talking horse, which is to be seen only with Coulter & Coulter's Famous Dog and and Pony Shows, billed to appear in this city for afternoon and night performances Monday, August 8th, is perhaps the most highly educated piece of horse flesh in the country. He correctly adds, subtracts, multiplies, picks out red, blue, black, in fact any color wanted, at the command of his trainer, or stranger still, any person in the audience. His most astonishing feat is telling the time of day to the minute by looking at an ordinary watch. He keeps his audience completely mystified and guessing for fully fifteen minutes. Imagine a horse picking out, in his judgment, the best looking lady in the audience—telling the color of her hair, hat, dress, etc., and the row, section and seat she occupies. Many who have not seen him work doubt his ability to do these things, but he does them, nevertheless. This act is only one of many astonishing things to be seen in a long program. This year in addition to dogs, ponies, horses, mules and burros, they have a number of circus features, among the most prominent we mention The Royal Japanese Troupe of jugglers, acrobats and gymnasts —5 in number. Watch for the street parade at 1 p. m. The price of admission will be 50 cents for adults, and 25 cents for children under 12 years of age, and all children under 6 years of age, if accompanied by a parent, will be admitted free.

There are fourteen splendid attractions for $1 50. The Chautauqua lasts from July 31 to August 12. Information may be obtained by writing to the secretary.

SKIN TROUBLES

A Healing Ointment With a Wide Range of Usefulness

A letter from Mrs. I. E. Cameron, Graduate Nurse, Augusta, Me., says: "I must write and tell you the good Resinol Ointment has done. I applied it to an ulcerated leg of six months' standing. Almost everything had been tried to heal it. Resinol was applied twice a day for four weeks, and the ulcers are entirely healed. It is now six months since the treatment and no indication of a return of the trouble. I have used Resinol for eruptions on children's faces, and for everything that seemed to need an ointment, with satisfactory results in every case."

Mrs. F. Cox, Chicago, Ill., says in another letter: "I cannot speak too highly of Resinol Ointment and Soap. They cured my baby boy of Eczema. He had a very severe case. Numerous other remedies had been tried and failed to do any good. I would not be without them in the house."

The first application will relieve the itching and irritation in skin diseases, and stop the pain in burns or scalds. Chafing, Sunburn, Poison Ivy eruptions are often cured by an overnight application.

Resinol Ointment, Resinol Soap and Resinol Medicated Shaving Stick are sold at all Drug Stores.

EPIDEMIC OF ITCH IN WELSH VILLAGE

"In Dowlais, South Wales, about fifteen years ago, families were stricken wholesale by a disease known as the itch. Believe me, it is the most terrible disease of its kind that I know of, as it itches all through your body and makes your life an inferno. Sleep is out of the question and you feel as if a million mosquitoes were attacking you at the same time. I knew a dozen families that were so affected.

"The doctors did their best, but their remedies were of no avail whatever. Then the families tried a druggist who was noted far and wide for his remarkable cures. People came to him from all parts of the country for treatment, but his medicine made matters still worse, as a last resort they were advised by a friend to use the Cuticura Remedies. I am glad to tell you that after a few days' treatment with Cuticura Soap, Ointment and Resolvent, the effect was wonderful and the result was a perfect cure in all cases.

"I may add that my three brothers, three sisters, myself and all our families have been users of the Cuticura Remedies for fifteen years. Thomas Hugh, 1650 West Huron St., Chicago, Ill., June 29, 1909."

SECOND NEGRO TO HANG.

Smith Only One Besides Junkin Since Restoration of Law.

Des Moines, July 23.—John Junkin, the negro murderer of Clara Rosen of Ottumwa, who will expiate his crime on the gallows at Fort Madison, Friday, July 29, is the second negro to draw the death penalty in Iowa since the law was changed, restoring capital punishment.

Joseph Smith, the other negro, was also the last man to be hanged in the state, he being executed at Fort Madison April 20, 1906, for the murder of a woman whom he had loved but who had spurned him.

A list of the legal executions in the state is as follows:

Chester Bellows at Charles City, 1877, for murder of his niece.

James O. Dooley of Adams county at Fort Madison, Oct. 19,1894, for murder of his sweetheart. He was 16 years old at the time of his execution.

J. K. Cumberland of Shelby county, at Fort Madison, Oct. 19, 1894, for murder of two men.

Joseph Smith, negro, at Fort Madison, April 20, 1906. He had killed a woman with whom he was in love but who had spurned him.

In addition to these men who have been required to expiate on the gallows their crimes of murder, there have been nine men sentenced to hang but whose sentences have been commuted to life imprisonment, or who were freed on retrial.

They are as follows:

Harry Hortman, Cherokee county, killed his sweetheart.

Dick Williams, Keokuk county, murdered a woman.

Louis Phillips and Albert G. Brooks, Buena Vista county, killed members of posse when caught in act of robbing bank.

Charles Rocker, Lyon county, sentenced to hang for murder of wife's first husband, freed on retrial.

Charles Stegall, Scott county.

George Weems and John Hammill, Polk county, killed L. D. Ridpath, Des Moines.

Louis Busse, Butler county, killed his wife.

Hillis to Speak at Commencement.

Dr. Newell Dwight Hillis, pastor of Plymouth Congregational church of Brooklyn and pulpit successor of Henry Ward Beecher, has been secured by President O. H. Longwell to deliver the commencement address at Highland Park College, Thursday, August 4. This will be Dr. Hillis' third appearance at Highland Park College commencement seasons. Four years ago he delivered the commencement address, while a year later he delivered the baccalaureate sermon. Dr. Hillis is a firm friend both of the school and of its talented head, President Longwell, and writes that he is only too pleased to accept the invitation to return this year and address the graduating class of 314 members.

The commencement season at Highland Park College opens July 26th with the graduating exercises of the College of Liberal Arts. Dr. Bolton, dean of the department of education of the State University at Iowa City, will deliver the principal address. Following come the closing exercises, on successive nights, of the Normal College, the College of Music, the College of Oratory and other departments of this popular college. Interspersed with the graduating exercises will be the annual alumni dinner, reception by President and Mrs. Longwell and literary society exercises.

Highland Park College is bringing to a close the most successful year in its long history. It has attracted students to the number of 2500 and given them a practical, technical education at little cost. Dr. Hillis declares it is the most practical and thorough school in the entire country.

A CLOVER LUNCHEON

UNIQUE MOTIF FOR DECORATION FOR SMALL FUNCTIONS.

Red and White Blossoms to Be Worked Into Appropriate Designs for Table and to Be Used In Trimming Rooms.

One of the prettiest of luncheons for afternoon or evening can be worked out with clover as a motif. All the decorations can be of clover, red and white. Bowls of the fragrant blossoms should stand on mantel and tables, while in the center of the lunch table spread with trefoil design may be a block of green turf from which springs a bunch of fresh and growing pink white clover. Let the large red clover leaves radiate from this to each cover, where there should be little boutonnieres of leaves and blossoms.

The refreshments can be Arcadian in their simplicity. If you wish to serve a course luncheon have berries au nature for the first course, then sorrel soup with croutons and sorrale leaves or cress as relishes. Follow with clover fritters, which are made from the white clover blossoms dipped in regular fritter batter and browned quickly in olive oil, and clover sandwiches, which are delicate slices of home-made bread spread with sweet butter that has been packed in a covered basket of fresh clover blossoms long enough to become impregnated with the odor.

Hot biscuit and honey make a delightful course and honey cakes with strawberry ice cream may be the dessert. If you do not wish as many courses, clover sandwiches with honey cakes and icecream, supplemented by a fruit punch and home-made mints, pink and white, will be sufficient.

Any of the flower or butterfly games will be appropriate.

Here, for example, is a flower contest. Provide each girl with a typewritten copy of the questions, pencil and paper. The one who can answer such a list accurately receives the prize.

1. The flower of June. Rose.
2. The Easter flower. Lily.
3. The flower that calls to church. Belle.
4. The flower that describes a large and vigorous girl. Bouncing Baby.
5. The flower with dark eyes that blooms in July fields. Black Eyed Susan.
6. "Wee crimson tipped flower." Daisy.
7. The precise flower. Primrose.
8. A girl's name and the color of her hair. Marigold.
9. The flower that stands for thought. Pansy.
10. The flower associated with Faust. Marguerite.
11. The modest flower that poets love. Violet.
12. The flower that describes a number of Friends. Quaker Ladies.

This list can be extended to include as many more names as desired.

For prizes that can be made at home nothing is prettier than hand-embroidered belts or opera glass bags, using the clover blossom design. Instead of having a grab bag I would bestow the gifts by the unraveling of a cobweb. Before the arrival of the company wind strings of different colors all over the house, passing them through keyholes, outdoors, in at the windows, upstairs and down. When the time for unraveling the web arrives give each person the end of a string which she must follow until she finds the dainty little souvenir concealed at the end.—Emma Paddock Telford.

Hints on Baking.

If you find the cake is rising in a cone in the center you may be sure the oven is too hot. Never mix a cake until the oven is ready to receive it; it is likely to fall and be heavy. On adding citron to a cake shave it in thin slices, flour it and lay it between layers of the batter. When baking a cake try to have nothing else in the oven, then set the tin as near the center of the bottom shelf as possible. Never leave a cake standing in the tin in which it is baked—it will make it heavy.

Dropped Doughnuts.

One gill milk, one gill sugar, grated rind of one lemon, three gills flour, one egg, beaten separately; one-third teaspoon salt, one-third teaspoon nutmeg, one heaping teaspoon baking powder. Roll in powdered sugar. Very nice.

Loops for Buttons.

In making loops for buttons on a dress or shirtwaist they should be worked over a pencil, as they will launder and keep their shape much more satisfactorily.

Women's Secrets

There is one man in the United States who has perhaps heard more women's secrets than any other man or woman in the country. These secrets are not secrets of guilt or shame, but the secrets of suffering, and they have been confided to Dr. R. V. Pierce in the hope and expectation of advice and help. That few of these women have been disappointed in their expectations is proved by the fact that ninety-eight per cent. of all women treated by Dr. Pierce have been absolutely and altogether cured. Such a record would be remarkable if the cases treated were numbered by hundreds only. But when that record applies to the treatment of more than half-a-million women, in a practice of over 40 years, it is phenomenal, and entitles Dr. Pierce to the gratitude accorded him by women, as the first of specialists in the treatment of women's diseases.

Every sick woman may consult Dr. Pierce by letter, absolutely without charge. All replies are mailed, sealed in perfectly plain envelopes, without any printing or advertising whatever, upon them. Write without fear as without fee, to World's Dispensary Medical Association, Dr. R. V. Pierce, Prest., Buffalo, N. Y.

Communicated — While the Rev. Wm. Koerner and wife of Reinbeck were visiting here with their children last week, they all enjoyed a very pleasant time. Though it was in the busy time of harvest, they all found a few hours to spend in some family socials. On Monday evening at H. J. Stille's ice cream and cake were served; and on Tuesday at Albert Koerner's a splendid oyster supper was enjoyed. At noons and suppers pleasant hours were spent at the John E. Stille and the Aug. Lau, Jr. homes and on Wednesday at noon all of the seven families gathered on the beautiful lawn at the Wm. Stille home and there among the beautifully trimmed cedars, they had their pictures taken in different groups, Elmer Ludeke doing the job. There were 27 persons present—3 little ones out of the J. E. Stille and W. F. Koerner homes being in heaven—makes 30 in all. There is great cause for thankfulness and may it never happen that anyone of them should ever separate himself from our Heavenly Father. and His grace in Christ Jesus. Very pleasant calls were also made at the Bettins, Ludeke and Lenz homes. Mrs. Ludeke being a sister of Mrs. Rev. Koerner and Mrs. Bettin and Mrs. E. Lenz being Rev. Koerner's sisters.

Reliable Market Reports

Nothing gives a newspaper a firmer place in public confidence than a well established reputation for accurate and complete reports of the world's markets. Business men throughout the West have long esteemed the Chicago Record-Herald for the uniformly trustworthy way in which it covers the whole field of financial and commercial news. Whether you want to know what consols are worth in London or what railroad stocks are quoted at in New York, what price corn is bringing in Kansas City or how wheat is selling at Minneapolis or Chicago, you can always turn to the financial and commercial pages of the Record Herald with the certainty of getting the latest facts in full and unbiased form.

The men who write the local live stock, board of trade and financial news for the Record-Herald are experienced staff editors whose years of trusted acquaintance with leading men often give them inside tips on important news in advance of other papers. The only morning newspaper in Chicago having its own special correspondent to cover the New York stock market is the Record-Herald. George S. Beachel's daily telegraphic reports from the stock and money markets of Wall Street are models of insight and accuracy. The Record-Herald makes it a point to cover in full the financial reports of corporations and the banking activities of Chicago and the West. The "Speculative Gossip" and notes of Wall Street and LaSalle street happenings are valued by the largest brokers for their glimpses of real "inside history" of the various markets.

LUMBER RATES UP

Federal Master Decides Western Schedule Too Low

IOWA CONSUMERS PAY MORE

Rates to Missouri Are Right, Says the Master, But East Too Low—Railroads Have Won Substantial Victory.

St. Paul, Minn., July 25.—The railroads have won a substantial victory in the findings of Frederick N. Dickson, master in chancery. They are the preliminary findings in the lumber rates instituted in the fall of 1908 against the interstate commerce commission by the Great Northern, Northern Pacific, Union Pacific and C., B. & Q. railroad companies. They were served on the attorneys of both sides.

The lumber rates established from the Pacific coast to all points west of the Pembina line which is made up of the western boundaries of Minnesota, Iowa and Missouri, are sustained but the rates from the coast to points east of the line are declared to be unreasonably low.

The railroads ask for a rate of 50 cents a hundredweight on lumber shipped from Portland, Ore., to St. Paul and for 60 cents from Portland to Chicago. The commission cut this to 45 cents from Portland to St. Paul and 55 cents from Portland to Chicago.

Mr. Dickson upholds the contentions of the railroads, and recommends an injunction nullifying the order of the commission on these rates and on other lumber rates from the coast to points east of the Pembina line.

MAYOR TELLS OF HIS LIFE

Court Room Was Packed to Hear Story of Ottumwa Official in Ouster Case.

Ottumwa, Ia., July 25.—Mayor Phillips took the stand in his own behalf in the hearing of the ouster proceedings against him. He told the court the story of his life.

The court room was packed and all listened with intense interest to every detail of the life story of the man who in his 70th year faces the situation of being cast out of the office after serving the first half of his fourth term.

Following the evidence of bankers, wholesale and retail business men, manufacturers and former aldermen, City Engineer John T. Brady and Street Commissioner Henry Adcock, testified to conversing daily with the mayor, and never once finding any indication of his being drunk.

The mayor who was born in South Wales, arrived in America when he was six years old. His life in the mines of Missouri was referred to, and he related how he had risen from the humbler positions in life to that of general superintendent of the Whitebreast Fuel Co., and he referred to his political career later in life, which included his running against the present junior senator of Iowa, A. B. Cummins, for the office of governor, in 1904.

Court adjourned Saturday afternoon to allow the court and attorneys to go to their homes over Sunday and the testimony of Mayor Phillips was only half finished. The defendant will use all of today to complete the evidence.

SYNOPSIS.

Thomas Ardmore and Henry Maine Griswold stumble upon intrigue when the governors of North and South Carolina are reported to have quarreled. Both states are in a turmoil over one Appleweight, an outlaw with political influence. Griswold allies himself with Barbara Osborne, daughter of the governor of South Carolina, while Ardmore espouses the cause of Jerry Dangerfield, daughter of the governor of North Carolina. These two ladies are trying to fill the shoes of their fathers, while the latter are missing. Unaware of each other's position, both Griswold and Ardmore set out to make the other prosecute. Ardmore organizes a big hunt. Griswold's men capture Appleweight. Jerry Dangerfield discovers the captive and leads him to Ardsley, her own prisoner. Griswold and Barbara explore the scene of the disappearance and meet Ardmore and Jerry. Griswold refuses to recognize his friend. Jerry reveals the presence of Appleweight at Ardsley.

CHAPTER XV.—Continued.

"There's a line of the South Carolina militia crawling through the woods toward Raccoon creek. They insist that it's a practice skirmish and that they've come over here because the landscape is naturally adapted to their purposes."

"It's awfully nice of them to like my scenery. You'd better send your best man out to meet Col. Gillingwater of the North Carolina militia, and tell him to march all his troops into the estate by the north gates, and to be in a hurry. Tell him—tell him Gov. Dangerfield is anxious to have the staff present in full uniform at a grand ball at Ardsley to-night."

Ardmore rode off alone toward Raccoon creek to catch a view of the enemy. How far would Griswold go? Ardmore could go as far as Griswold; yet he was puzzled to know why Griswold was in the field at all.

These reflections carried him far toward Raccoon creek, and when he had reached that tortuous stream he dismounted and tied his horse, the more freely to examine the frontier. By jumping from boulder to boulder he crossed the turbulent tide and gained the other side with a sense of entering the enemy's country.

"Now," he muttered, "I am in South Carolina."

He drew out his map and held it against a tree the better to study it, reassuring himself that his own property line embraced several sections of the forest on the south side of the state boundary.

"If Grissy shoots me, it will be on my own land," he said aloud.

He cautiously followed the stream until, several hundred yards farther on, and overhanging the creek, he came upon the log cabin in which Big Paul had reported the presence of a ghost. Paul's story had not interested him particularly, but now that he was in the neighborhood he resolved to visit the cabin and learn if possible how ghosts amuse themselves by day. He had thrust a revolver into his pocket before leaving the house and while he had no idea that ghosts may be shot, he now made sure that the weapon was in good order. As he sat on a log slipping the cylinder through his fingers he heard whistling farther along the creek, followed quickly by the snapping of twigs under a heavy tread, and a moment later a tall, slender man broke into view.

The stranger was dressed like a countryman, but he was unmistakably not of the Ardsley force of workmen, for these wore a rough sort of uniform. His hands were thrust carelessly into the side pockets of a gray jeans coat. They were thrust in deep, so that the coat sagged at the pockets. His trousers were turned up from a pair of rough shoes and he wore a gray flannel shirt, the collar of which was guiltless of a tie. He was smooth shaven, and carried in his mouth a short pipe, which he paused to relight when about a dozen yards from Ardmore. Then, as he held the lighted match above the pipe bowl for an instant to make sure his tobacco was burning, Ardmore jumped up and covered him with the pistol.

"I beg your pardon," said the master of Ardsley, "but you're my prisoner!"

The stranger shook the flame out of the match-stick carefully and threw it away before turning toward his captor.

"Young man," he said with perfect self-possession, "don't fool with that gun, it might go off."

His drawl was characteristic of the region; his tone was one of amused tolerance. Ardmore was short of stature, and his knickerbockers, leggings and Norfolk jacket were not wholly consonant with the revolver, which, however, he leveled very steadily at the stranger's head.

"You are an intruder on my property," said the master of Ardsley, "and unless I'm much mistaken you have been playing ghost in that cabin. I've heard about you. Your gang has been cutting off my timber about long enough, and this game of playing ghost to scare my men won't do."

"Stealing your timber?" And the stranger was clearly surprised. He held his pipe in his hand with his thumb over the bowl and seemed to take a more serious interest in his captor.

"And now," continued Ardmore, "I'm tired of having this end of the country run by the Appleweights, and their disreputable gang, so I'm going to lock you up."

The stranger turned toward the cabin, one corner of which was plainly visible, and shrugged his shoulders.

"I have nothing to do with the Appleweights, and I assure you I am not a timber thief."

"Then you must be the one who has lifted a few steers out of my herd. It makes no difference just what branch of the business you are engaged in, for we're picking up all the gang and you've got to come along with me."

The captive showed signs of anger for the first time. His face flushed, and he took a step toward Ardmore, who immediately threw up the revolver so that it pointed at the man's head.

"You're My Prisoner!"

"Stop right there! We've got old man Appleweight, so you've lost your leader, and I tell you the jig's up. We'll have you all in jail before another 24 hours has passed."

"I judge from the tone of your remarks that you are Ardmore, the owner of Ardsley. Am I right?"

"You are quite right. And you are a member of a disreputable gang of outlaws that has been bringing shame upon the state of North Carolina. Now, I want you to march straight ahead of me. Step lively now!" And Ardmore flourished the pistol menacingly. "March!"

The man hesitated, flung up his head defiantly, then moved slowly forward.

"We will cross the creek right here," he ordered; "it's a pretty jump there from that boulder—there, that was bully! Now right along there over the log—see the trail! Good!"

It was warm and the captive was perspiring freely. He moved along docilely, and finding that he manifested no inclination to bolt, Ardmore dropped the revolver to his side, but with his finger on the trigger.

They soon reached a field where some laborers were at work, and Ardmore called them to him for instructions.

"Boys, this is one of the timber thieves; put him in that corn-crib until I come back for him. The nights are warm; the sky is perfectly clear; and you will kindly see that he does not lack for food."

Two of the men jumped forward and seized Ardmore's prisoner, who now broke forth in a torrent of wrath, struggled vigorously.

"That's right, boys; that's right; easy there! Now in he goes."

A series of corn-cribs fringed the field, and into one of these, from which half the corn had been removed, the prisoner was thrust sprawling upon the yellow ears, and when he rose and flung himself round, the door of the corn-crib slammed in his face. He bellowed with rage now, seeing that his imprisonment was a serious matter, and that it seemed likely to be prolonged indefinitely.

"They always told me you were a fool," he howled, "but I didn't know that anything as crazy as you are was loose in the world."

"Thank you. The head of your gang is much more polite. He's sitting on his case of Chateau Bizet in my wine cellar, playing solitaire."

"Appleweight in your wine cellar!" bawled the captive in astonishment.

"Certainly. I was afraid to lock him in a room with bath for fear it might give him hydrophobia; but he's perfectly content in the wine cellar."

"What are you going to do with him?"

"I haven't decided yet just what to do with him, but the scoundrel undoubtedly belongs in South Carolina, and I have every intention of making his own state punish him."

The prisoner leaned heavily against his prison door and glared out upon his jailer with a new, fierce interest.

"I tell you I've nothing to do with the Appleweights! I don't want to reveal my identity to you, you young beggar; but I demand my legal rights."

"My dear sir," retorted Ardmore, "you have no legal rights, for the writ of habeas corpus doesn't go here. You seem rather intelligent for a barn burner and timber thief. Come now, what is your name?"

The prisoner gazed down upon the imperturbable figure of his captor through the slats of the corn-crib. Ardmore returned his gaze with his most bland and child-like air. Many people had been driven to the point of madness by Ardmore's apparent dullness. The prisoner realized that he must launch a thunderbolt if he would disturb a self-possession so complete—a tranquillity as sweet as the fading afternoon.

"Mr. Ardmore, I dislike to do it, but your amazing conduct makes it necessary for me to disclose my identity," and the man's manner showed real embarrassment.

"I knew it; I knew it;" nodded Ardmore, folding his arms across his chest. "You're either the king of Siam or the prince of Petosky. As either, I salute you!"

"No!" roared the captive, beating impotently against the door of the cage with his hands. "No! I'm the governor of South Carolina!"

This statement failed, however, to produce the slightest effect on Mr. Ardmore, who only smiled slightly, a smile less incredulous than disdainful.

"Oh, pshaw; that's nothing," he replied "I'm the governor of North Carolina!" and mounting his horse he gravely lifted his hat to the prisoner and galloped away.

While Mr. Ardmore was securing his prisoner in the corn-crib it may be interesting to return for a moment to the haunted log cabin on Raccoon creek, the interior of which was roughly but comfortably furnished. Above were two small sleeping-rooms, and beside the bed in each stood a suit-case and a hand-satchel. In each room hung, on convenient hooks, a long, black frock-coat, a pair of trousers of light cloth, and a broad-brim black felt hat. Coat, trousers and hat were exactly alike.

In the room below sat a man in his shirt-sleeves, his feet on a cheap deal table, blowing rings from a cigar. He presented a picture of the greatest ease and contentment, as he occasionally stroked his short brown beard, or threw up his arms and clasped his hands about his head or caught lazily at the smoke rings. On the table lay an array of playing cards and poker chips.

"It's too good to last forever," the lone occupant reflected aloud, stifling a yawn, and he reached out, with careless indifference, toward a bundle of newspapers tied together with a piece of twine and drew one out and spread it across his knees. He yawned again, as though the thought of a world whose affairs were stamped in printer's ink bored him immensely; and then the bold head-lines that shouted at him across half a quarter of the sheet caused him to gasp, and his feet struck the bare floor of the cabin resoundingly. He now bent over the paper with the greatest eagerness, muttering as he read, and some of his mutterings were, it must be confessed, not without profane embellishment.

TWO COWARDLY GOVERNORS MISSING.

Scandal Affecting Two State Executives—Is the Appleweight Case Responsible?—Rumors of Fatal Duel on State Line.

He read breathlessly the startling story that followed the head-lines, then rose and glanced anxiously at his watch.

"Am I drunk or mad? I must find Osborne and get out of this."

He leaped to the open door, and gazed into the forest from a little platform that commanded all sides of the cabin. And there, to his utter amazement, he saw men in khaki emerging cautiously from the woods. They were unmistakably soldiers of some sort, for an officer was giving sharp commands, and the line opened out like a fan along the creek. The observer of this maneuver mopped his head with his handkerchief as he watched the alert movements of the figures in khaki.

He was so absorbed that he failed to hear stealthy steps at the rear of the platform, but he was now rudely aroused by two uniformed youngsters with S. C. N. G. on their caps, who sprang upon him and bore him with a crash to the puncheon floor.

"You're our prisoner!" shouted one of them, rising when he found that the prisoner yielded without resistance.

"What for?" blurted the captive, sitting up and rubbing his elbow.

"For being Bill Appleweight, alias Poteet. Get up, now, and come with us to headquarters, or my instructions are to break your head."

"Who in the devil are you?" panted the prisoner.

"Well, if it's anything to you, we're the South Carolina militia, so you'd better get up and climb."

(TO BE CONTINUED.)

Georgia Constable's Dilemma.

Cap. Carroll, one of the town constables, by direction levied on a negro woman's aged horse and buggy which had been driven into town. The horse was blind and so old that it could scarcely walk. But to cap it all another negro woman claimed two of the wheels of the buggy and a negro man the others. So you can imagine the officer's feeling standing there in the street wondering how to get the vehicle with only one wheel that could be touched by even the strong arm of the law, away, as the woman was returning home afoot. But as luck would have it, Bill Anderson came along and proposed to sign an appearance bond for the property. The woman was called back, the papers were signed and Cap. Carroll was the happiest man in town, for he had never driven a blind horse hitched to a buggy with but one wheel.—Dahlonega Nugget.

A Mighty Massachusetts Hunter.

Roland Smith, who lives in the town of Sheffield, probably holds the record locally as a hunter of muskrats, says the Springfield Republican. Every year during the January thaws he in company with a man spends the warm days shooting rats, and they have captured a great many. This month during the two days that the water overflowed the meadows they went out in a boat and killed between 150 and 160 rats. These will bring from 50 to 75 cents a pelt, according to the size and quality of the fur. Mr. Smith hunts the rats with a rifle and in this way is able to kill them without damaging the skin to any extent. Sometimes when it is necessary a shotgun is used.

The Deacon's Parable.

A self-conscious and egotistical young clergyman was supplying the pulpit of a country church. After the service he asked one of the deacons, a grizzled, plain-spoken man, what he thought of his morning effort.

"Waal," answered the old man, slowly, "I'll tell ye in a kind of parable. I remember Tunk Weatherbee's fust deer hunt, when he was green. He follered the deer's tracks all right, but he follered 'em all day in the wrong direction."—Housekeeper.

Immense Saving Possible.

In a preliminary bulletin on the cost of maintaining a tuberculosis sanatorium, the National Association for the Study and Prevention of Tuberculosis announces that the average cost per patient per day in thirty semi-charitable sanatoria scattered in all parts of the United States is $1.669. These institutions represent an annual expenditure of over $1,300,000 and over 815,000 days of treatment given each year. The bulletin, which is part of an extensive study the National association is making for its bureau of information, points out that the country could save annually at least $150,000,000 if the indigent consumptives were properly segregated.

ANDY'S FRANK BOOK

"It's sad, but true," said Hutch, the reformed telegraph operator, who had been in deep thought for some time, "but I can't think of the copy-book motto or maxim, or whatever it's called, that fits the case of a friend of mine. I once knew all those top lines, too, but it isn't 'Virtue is its own reward' or 'A kind answer turneth away wrath,' or any that comes to my mind just now. However, here is the story:

"It was when I was manager for a branch office of a telegraph company that I became acquainted with Andy Glenn. He was in the railroad business in a small way, and that threw us together. He was strictly honest, but if there were any perquisites going around he was out for his'n, and got all that came his way. Should one be coming along the street, Andy was not the man to sidestep or duck around a corner. No, he met it face to face, and always was the captor.

"Often I have thought that Andy was the man for whom trading stamps and tobacco tags were invented, for they sure were his style. It was rumored that when he was a child he enjoyed being sick just to get the candy or lump of sugar that went with the medicine, and he always led his classes because the teacher gave a prize each month for the best pupil.

"Well it so fell out that Andy became the owner of the 'frank book' from the telegraph company which employed me. You know a frank book is like one of these postage stamp books you buy at the postoffice with pages of stamps that can be torn out and used separately. The franks are given to individuals the company considers itself under obligations to and can be used to convey free purely social messages signed by the one in whose name they are issued. One attached to a message will secure transmission free, such information as 'It's a ten-pound boy and is named after you, uncle,' 'Meet Mary at the train. She will spend two weeks with you,' etc.

"Now, Andy found these stamps convenient and his communications by wire were numerous. His book had been renewed during the year of its life, but with the last day of February it expired by the statute of limitations indorsed upon its back. Andy was brought to a realization of this fact by the receipt of a new book of stamps for the coming 12 months. But alas, he searched himself and found a bunch of the old stamps still unused, and with the coming of February 28 upon him saw their value flitting. He was taken by surprise and had not realized the time was so short. Never before had he seen such valuable collateral go to waste. What was to be done was his problem.

"I was in my office on the night in question, and Andy called me up and stated his case. He wanted to know if he could not continue to use the old stamps until the book was empty, but I said it was ag'in the rules. He asked if they could be exchanged for new ones and again I had to tell him nay.

"Then came his heroic resolve—he would use them all before midnight, and not let the telegraph company get the better of him.

"Then came a hunting up of friends to whom he owed letters and the writing in his hotel room of lengthy messages, replying to their latest communications, the affixing of stamps, the call for a bell boy to take the dispatches to a branch telegraph office in the hotel and Andy retired shortly before midnight conscious of a duty (and a telegraph company) well done.

"As Andy was beginning his dreams the operator in charge of the branch was relaying the messages to the main office, satisfied with the bell boy's assurance that 'Mr. Glenn says these are all right and get 'em off in a hurry.'

"But woe it is to tell. A mistake had been made, and the branch office was that of another telegraph company, our rival, which never had granted Andy the freedom of its wires, but knew he was responsible financially for any fair amount of business. The error was not discovered for two days, when the messages were sorted and the valueless stamps were discovered.

"Then a settlement was desired, and Andy was obliged to dig for $8 to pay for his set of dispatches, which conveyed good wishes and gossip that he needn't have sent at all or could have distributed for a few two-cent postage stamps.

"Since then Andy has been careful of the reckless use of perquisites and he looks at the sign over the theater before he presents his pass at the door.

"Still, I haven't been able to figure out the moral of the story—if there is one."

A GREAT HORSE

Sparkle, the wonderful talking horse, which is to be seen only with Coulter & Coulter's Famous Dog and and Pony Shows, billed to appear in this city for afternoon and night performances Monday, August 8th, is perhaps the most highly educated piece of horse flesh in the country. He correctly adds, subtracts, multiplies, picks out red, blue, black, in fact any color wanted, at the command of his trainer, or stranger still, any person in the audience. His most astonishing feat is telling the time of day to the minute by looking at an ordinary watch. He keeps his audience completely mystified and guessing for fully fifteen minutes. Imagine a horse picking out, in his judgment, the best looking lady in the audience—telling the color of her hair, hat, dress, etc., and the row, section and seat she occupies. Many who have not seen him work doubt his ability to do these things, but he does them, nevertheless. This act is only one of many astonishing things to be seen in a long program. This year in addition to dogs, ponies, horses, mules and burros, they have a number of circus features, among the most prominent we mention The Royal Japanese Troupe of jugglers, acrobats and gymnasts —5 in number. Watch for the street parade at 1 p. m. The price of admission will be 50 cents for adults, and 25 cents for children under 12 years of age, and all children under 6 years of age, if accompanied by a parent, will be admitted free.

STANDARD BEARERS PICNIC

(Communicated.)

This is a busy time of the year, especially for the young men living on the farm, but in spite of all the work, the Standard Bearer Society of Klemme did plan and had a picnic in honor of the fifth anniversary of the Society.

They started from town in the forenoon, drove south until they found an ideal picnic ground in the timber along the way. This place was found in the woods on James Schneider's farm.

In order to do justice to the young ladies of the society we must say that they certainly are able to prepare an ample picnic dinner. It very seldom happens when the lemonade is to be made that the water can be gotten from a spring, but the privilege was granted this crowd. One of the young men was very thoughtful and brought a soft rubber ball and a bat made out of a board which was four feet long and one foot across the top but tapering. In the afternoon the young ladies as well as the young men, enjoyed a game of base ball. It was concluded that the girls did not have reasons not to feel proud of their game. They departed with the thought of having another picnic next year.

The "Free" American is the Land Owner

Capital and Labor may war, trusts may flourish and small dealers go to the wall, but the man who owns his land and draws his livlihood from the soil is independent. He doesn't need to worry.

There is no security on the market today as safe for the farmer to buy as good agricultural land.

Put your money in land. It is the safest investment known. You will then own and control your own investment; no dishonest or careless officer can lose your money; it cannot burn up; the broad acres won't run away.

Our farms are in the best agricultural section, where lands are steadily increasing in value.

We are owners and are continually purchasing large tracts of agricultural lands and always have on hand suitable farms for the actual settler or a suitable tract for the speculator. It is our effort to buy only such lands as are practical for actual farming. Our customers who purchased lands from us have uniformly and without exception made money. Write us today for maps and descriptive matter.

WENDLING'S ARREST

Man Accused of Kellner Murder Taken in San Francisco

TIP IS GIVEN BY A WOMAN

Whenever Sleuth Lost Scent He Returned to Mrs. Muena at Hume, Mo., to Whom Fugitive Was Engaged.

San Francisco, Aug. 1.—Dragged from beneath a sink in the washroom of a Third street lodging house in this city, where he had been hiding for twenty-four hours, Joseph A. Wendling, accused of the murder of little Alma Kellner in Louisville, Ky., was arrested Saturday by Detectives Burke and Ryan of the local police department. Wendling admitted his identity, but protested his innocence.

A few hours after the arrest Captain of Detectives J. P. Carney, of Louisville, arrived to learn that his 11,000 mile search for Wendling had been crowned with success. It was the tip telegraphed from the Kentucky detective which led to the capture. In his relentless pursuit of the supposed murderer, lasting for four months, Carney many times lost the trail, but the secret of the whereabouts of his quarry always lay with Mrs. Cora Muena, a milliner of Hume, Mo. It was from her that Carney flashed the information that led to the arrest.

It seemed the irony of fate that the only respectable woman found by Carney to have been connected with Wendling during his wanderings should have been the unconscious means of betraying him. Mrs. Muena met Wendling at the home of her aunt in Houston, Tex., and before she returned to Hume she was engaged to the dashing young Frenchman, who had dazzled the aunt with his tales of the wealth in France which would come to him with the death of his aged father. Before Mrs. Muena left Houston she grew to fear Wendling, and after her return to Hume she broke the engagement.

ARREST DENTIST AND TYPIST

Dew Gets His Man—Crippen and Miss Leneve Arrested Aboard Liner Montrose.

Father Point, Que., Aug. 1.—Hawley Harvey Crippen and Ethel Clare Leneve, his stenographer, who fled from Londan after the disappearance of Belle Elmore, the doctor's wife, were arrested here yesterday aboard the Canadian Pacific liner Montrose at the command of Inspector Dew of Scotland Yard.

The identification of the long sought fugitives on board the fog-shrouded steamer by the English detective, who had raced across the Atlantic ahead of the Montrose, marked the culmination of one of the most sensational flights in recent criminal annals. Accompanied by two Canadian officers, he boarded the vessel at 8:30 o'clock, and fifteen minutes later both man and girl were locked in their staterooms, Crippen, broken in spirit, but mentally relieved by the relaxed tension, the girl, garbed in boy's clothes, sobbing hysterically. They were no longer the "Rev. John Robinson and son," as booked from Antwerp July 20.

JOHN G. CARLISLE IS DEAD

Former Secretary of the Treasury Succumbs In New York From Heart Failure

New York, Aug. 1.—John G. Carlisle, former secretary of the treasury, who had been critically ill for the past two days, died at his apartments in New York at 10:50 o'clock last night, of heart failure, accompanied by oedema of the lungs.

John Griffin Carlisle was born in Kenton County, Ky., on September 5, 1835. He was educated in the public schools, later studied law and was admitted to the bar. Always a consistent democrat and interested in public affairs as a young man, he rose from the Kentucky house of representatives to the state senate, served as lieutenant governor and finally graduated into national affairs.

DEMOCRATIC TICKET.

For Supreme Court Judges—P. B. Wolfe, of Clinton, and Anthony Van Wagenen, of Sioux City.

For governor—Claude R. Porter of Centerville, Appanoose county.

For lieutenant governor—Parley Sheldon of Ames, Story county.

For secretary of state—A. J. Anders of Oelwein, Fayette county.

For auditor of state—John W. Blake of Atlantic, Cass county.

For treasurer of state—James V. Curran of Ottumwa, Wapello county.

For attorney general—C. E. Walters of Toledo, Tama county.

For superintendent of public instruction—H. A. Mitchell of Carroll, Carroll county.

For clerk of the supreme court—Robert Van Boskirk of Marengo, Iowa county.

For reporter of the supreme court—George Harnagle of Des Moines, Polk county.

For railroad commissioners—Walter H. Dewey of Chariton, Lucas county.

Nixon P. Jones of Des Moines, Polk county.

Ottumwa, Ia., July 28.—Jerry B. Sullivan's "key-note" address pleased the democrats who assembled in their annual convention to prepare a platform for the campaign which Claude R. Porter will make against Governor Carroll. Mr. Sullivan treated almost entirely with national issues and declared that the party is dominated by the interests. He was frequently interrupted by applause and had the attention of a big audience throughout his speech, despite the heat of the room.

Clint L. Price called the convention to order at 11 o'clock following a concert by the Fifty-fourth regimental band. N. F. Reed read an address of welcome which had been dictated by Mayor T. J. Phillips, who, though on the stage, was slightly ill.

Following Mayor Phillips' address, Chairman Price introduced Jerry B. Sullivan of Des Moines, who delivered his address. At the end of the speech the results of the caucuses of the various districts were announced and a recess taken.

When the convention reassembled Henry J. Stiger of Iowa county was made permanent chairman.

The credentials committee reported all counties represented.

The Platform.

The platform adopted by the democrats in state convention declares that democracy is a conservation of property and champion of human rights. It defers alike both fraternalism and communism. The tariff law is denounced and declared tariff taxes ought to be for public purposes only. Trusts are intolerable and are fostered by republican tariff legislation. The true method of enforcing the criminal statutes is by criminal prosecution of the individual guilty of the wrong. There should be regulation of the rates for service of railways, telephone, etc. Franchises should be given only on vote of the public. The republican party is charged with a reckless expenditure of money. The income tax is favored and the election of senators by the people. The central bank and postal plan is opposed. Conservation of national resources is favored, also improvement of waterways. The platform declares for the recall of officials in place of the Cosson law. The primary law amendment is favored to reduce expenses.

Liquor Plank

The democratic party is in favor of as large a degree of individual liberty as is compatible with the rights, of organized society and therefore, with reference to the use and sale of intoxicating liquors, we are in favor of a strict local option law with high license, the minimum to be fixed by the legislature, under which the municipality shall declare by vote of the people thereof, whether or not intoxicants shall be sold therein.

Judge P. B. Wolfe, of Clinton, and Anthony Van Wagenen, of Sioux City were nominated for supreme court judges.

Claude R. Porter, democratic nominee for governor of Iowa, addressed the democratic state convention.

He has never re been so near trouble as he is , and I may have to give him his aid to the injured when he finds that the South Carolina troops are Raccoon creek, all ready to march our sacred soil."

But suppose your adjutant general ldn't go back to his troops after ees you, then what am I to do?"

f you don't see him by ten o'clock will take personal command and rcise your own discretion as to the method of landing Appleweight a South Carolina jail. After that must find papa, and it will be up im to satisfy the newspapers and constituents with some excuse for strange disappearance."

Collins had come from Raleigh on evening train, and he had solemn- assured Ardmore that the present te of affairs could not be maintain- another 24 hours. He had ex- sted all his professional resources, the North Carolina newspapers of shades of opinion were clamoring the truth, and were insisting that, the honor and dignity of the state, v. Dangerfield should show himself Raleigh.

"We've got to find Dangerfield or st. Now, where is that eminent tesman, Ardmore? You can't tell you don't know; but if you don't, ss Dangerfield does, and she's got tell."

"She hasn't the slightest idea, but the newspapers find out that he's lly and truly missing, he will have show up; but first we've got to take ppleweight off that case of Chateau zet and lodge him in the jail at rner Court House, and let Gov. Os- rne have the odium of incarcerating e big chief of the border, to whom is under the greatest political ob- ations."

"But it's all over the country now at Osborne hasn't been seen in Co- mbia since he and Dangerfield had at row in New Orleans. Cranks are rning up everywhere, pretending to governors of various states, and d Dangerfield is seen on all the out- ing steamers. There's been nothing e it since the kidnaping of Charley oss."

Ardmore drew on his riding-glove ffectively, and a delighted grin il- minated his countenance.

"I caught a lunatic down on the accoon this afternoon who said he as the governor of South Carolina, d I locked him up."

"Well, he may be Osborne," re- arked Collins, with journalistic sus- cion.

"And he may be a Swiss admiral or e king of Mars. I guess I'm a gov- rnor myself, and I know what a gov- rnor looks like and acts like—you an't fool me. I put this impostor here he'll have a chance to study as- ronomy to-night."

"Then he isn't on that case of Cha- au Bizet with Appleweight?"

"No; I locked him in a corn-crib un- l I get time to study his credentials. ome along now!"

Ardmore, Collins and Cooke rode apidly away through the wide gates f the estate along the Sapphire road, ver which, by his last bulletin, the djutant general of North Carolina as marching his troops. They had ft Cooke's men with Paul's foresters o guard the house and to picket the anks of Raccoon in the immediate eighborhood of the camp of the outh Carolinians.

"I guess those fellows can hold 'em till morning," said Cooke. "We've got to clean up the whole business by tomorrow night. You can't have two states at war with each other this way without shaking up the universe, and if federal troops come down here to straighten things out it won't be funny."

They had ridden about a mile, when Cooke checked his horse with an exclamation.

"There's somebody coming like the devil was after him. It must be Gillingwater."

They drew rein and waited, the quick patter of hoofs ringing out sharply in the still night. The moonlight gave them a fair sweep of the road, and they at once saw a horseman galloping rapidly toward them.

"Lordy, the man's on fire!" gasped Ardmore.

"By George, you're right!" muttered Collins, moving nervously in his saddle. "It's a human sunburst."

"It's only his gold braid," explained the practical Cooke.

Seeing three men drawn across the road, the horseman began to check his flight.

"Men!" he shouted, as his horse pawed the air with its forefeet, "is this the road to Ardsley?"

"Right you are," yelled Cooke, and they were aware of a flash, a glitter that startled and dazzled the eye, and Col. Rutherford Gillingwater thundered on.

They rode on and saw presently the lights of camp-fires, and a little later were ceremoniously halted at the roadside by an armed guard.

It had been arranged that Collins, who had once been a second lieutenant in the Georgia militia, should be presented as an officer of the regular army, detailed as special aide to Gov. Dangerfield during the encampment, and that in case Gillingwater failed to return promptly he should take command of the North Carolina forces.

An open field had been seized for the night's camp, and the tents already shone white in the moonlight. The three men introduced themselves to the militia officers, and Collins expressed their regret that they had missed the adjutant general.

"Gov. Dangerfield wished you to move your force on to Ardsley should we fail to meet Col. Gillingwater; and you had better strike your tents and be in readiness to advance in case he doesn't personally return with orders."

Capt. Collins, as he had designated himself, apologized for not being in uniform.

"I lost my baggage train," he laughed, "and Gov. Dangerfield is so anxious not to miss this opportunity to settle the Appleweight case that I hurried out to meet you with these gentlemen."

"Appleweight!" exclaimed the group of officers in amazement.

"None other than the great Appleweight!" responded Collins. "The governor has him in his own hands at last, and is going to carry him across the border and into a South Carolina bastile, as a little pleasantry on the governor of South Carolina."

The militia officers gave the necessary orders for breaking the half-formed camp, and then turned their attention to the entertainment of their guests. Ardmore kept track of the time, and promptly at ten o'clock Collins rose from the log by the roadside where they had been sitting.

"We must obey the governor's orders, gentlemen," said Collins courteously, "and march at once to Ardsley. I, you understand, am only a courier, and your guest for the present."

"If you please," asked Cooke, when the line had begun to move forward, "what is that wagon over there?"

He pointed to a mule team hitched to a quartermaster's wagon that a negro was driving into position across the rough field. It was piled high with luggage, a pyramid that rose black against the heavens. One of the militia officers, evidently greatly annoyed, bawled to the driver to get back out of the way.

"Pardon me," said Collins politely, "but is that your personal baggage, gentlemen?"

"That belongs to Col. Gillingwater," remarked the quartermaster. "The rest of us have a suit-case apiece."

The pyramidal baggage wagon had gained the road behind them, and lingered uncertainly, with the driver asleep and waiting for orders. The conspirators were about to gallop forward to the head of the moving column, when Collins pointed across the abandoned camp-ground to where a horseman, who had evidently made a wide detour of the advancing column, rode madly toward the baggage wagon.

"The gentleman's trying to kill his horse, I should judge," murmured Ardmore. "By Jove!"

"It's Gillingwater!" chorused the trio.

The rider in his haste had overlooked the men in the road. He dashed through the wide opening in the fence, left by the militiamen, took the ditch by the roadside at a leap, wakened the sleeping driver on the wagon with a roar, and himself leaped upon the box and began turning the horses.

Belaboring the Mules Furiously.

"What do you think he's doing?" asked Cooke.

"He's in a hurry to get back to mother's cooking," replied Ardmore. "He's seen Miss Dangerfield and learned that war is at hand, and he's going to get his clothes out of danger. Lordy! Listen to him slashing the mules!"

"But you don't think—"

The wagon had swung round, and already was in rapid flight. Collins howled in glee.

"Come on! We can't miss a show like this!"

"Leave the horses then! There's a hill there that will break his neck. We'd better stop him if we can!" cried Cooke, dismounting.

They threw their reins to the driver of the wagon, who had been brushed from his seat by the impatient adjutant general, and was chanting weirdly to himself at the roadside.

The wagon, piled high with trunks and boxes, was dashing forward, Gillingwater belaboring the mules furiously, and, hearing the shouts of strange pursuers, yelling at the team in a voice shrill with fear.

"Come on, boys!" shouted Ardmore, thoroughly aroused, "catch the spy and traitor!"

The road dipped down into the shadow of a deep cut, where the moon's rays but feebly penetrated, and where the flow of springs had softened the surface; but the pursuers were led on by the rumble of the wagon, which swung from side to side perilously, the boxes swinging about noisily and toppling threateningly at the apex. Down the sharp declivity the wagon plunged like a ship bound for the bottom of the sea.

The pursuers bent gamely to their task in the rough road, with Cooke slightly in the lead. Suddenly he shouted warningly to the others, as something rose darkly above them like a black cloud, and a trunk fell with a mighty crash only a few feet ahead of them. The top had been shaken off in the fall, and into it head first plunged Ardmore.

"There's another coming!" yelled Collins, and a much larger trunk struck and split upon a rock at the roadside. Clothing of many kinds strewed the highway. A pair of trousers, flung fiercely into the air, caught on the limb of a tree, shook free like a banner, and hung there somberly etched against the stars.

Ardmore crawled out of the trunk, screaming with delight. The fragrance of toilet water broke freshly upon the air.

"It's his ammunition!" bawled Ardmore, rubbing his head where he had struck the edge of a tray. "His scent bottles are smashed, and it's only by the grace of Providence that I haven't cut myself on broken glass."

They went down the road, stumbling now and then over a bit of debris from the vanished wagon.

"It's like walking on carpet," observed Cooke, picking up a feathered chapeau. "I didn't know there were so many clothes in all the world."

They abandoned the idea of farther pursuit on reaching a trunk standing on end, from which a uniform dress-coat drooped sadly.

"This is not our trouble; it's his trouble. I guess he's struck a smoother road down there. We'd better go back," said Cooke.

In a moment they had climbed the hill and were in hot pursuit of the adjutant general's abandoned army.

(TO BE CONTINUED.)

Southern Gold and Southern Cotton.

Before 1849 the south furnished the chief gold fields of the country, but since that date the south has not been in the running. This section has been outclassed by California, by Colorado, by Nevada, and last but not least by Alaska. In the last fiscal year Alabama produced gold to the value of $41,200 and silver to the value of $200. This state was outranked in gold production in order by North Carolina, Georgia, and South Carolina, but no one of them turned out enough gold to make the round figure of $100,000. The entire production of gold in the south in the last year was $256,400 and $273,000 in silver. Nearly all the silver was mined in Texas.

It is pretty plain that Alabama and all the rest of the south can get more gold out of the soil via the cotton boll than it can dig out in the gold mines proper. The climate and the soil can in that way be coined into gold. The method is a trifle more circuitous, but it yields in cotton alone more money nine times over than do all the gold fields in the country, for the total yield of gold in the last fiscal year in this country was but $94,560,000.—Birmingham Age-Herald.

Woodpecker's Foresight.

In California the woodpecker stores acorns away, although he never eats them. He bores several holes, differing slightly in size, at the fall of the year, invariably in a pine tree. Then he finds an acorn, which he adjusts to one of the holes prepared for its reception.

But he does not eat the acorn, for as a rule he is not a vegetarian. His object in storing away the acorns exhibits foresight and a knowledge of results more akin to reason than to instinct. The succeeding winter the acorn remain intact, but becoming saturated are predisposed to decay when they are attacked by maggots, which seem to delight in this special food.

It is then that the woodpecker reaps the harvest his wisdom has provided, at a time when the ground, being covered with snow, he would experience difficulty otherwise in obtaining suitable or palatable food.

Aviation and Islam.

It is said that aviation is not considered orthodox among Mussulmans. M. de Caters has given his impressions to a Paris contemporary of his visit to Constantinople. He says the Turks and Arabs greatly amused him. "The Koran says that only God is able to exalt himself above men, so one can imagine how awestricken Turks were when they saw me in my aeoplane above their capital. They looked upon me as a demigod. As to the biplane, most of the Turks did not dare approach it. Those who did made their salaams to it."

In a great measure the commercial standing of a town is reckoned according to the number and value of its business enterprises; its moral standing, according to the number and power of its institutions, exerting a good influence as opposed to exerting a bad. These things being true, it should be the intent of the citizens of a place to encourage such new enterprises as tend in any way to make the place better; for a town is greatly what the citizens make it—nothing more and nothing less.

Ideals of Our Mothers.

As for the difference between us and our mothers, of course we all begin by protesting that if we can ever hope to do our duty as well as they did our consciences will acquit us. Who of us women, in our comfortable living, dare compare ourselves to our mothers? They did not talk about their "rights!" they fulfilled them—in taking care of their families. They did not talk about "reforms;" they would have thought interference in municipal questions and agitation for legislation most unbecoming and unfeminine. They had—bless their dear hearts!—a gentle and ladylike irresponsibility in regard to the world lying in darkness in city halls or legislative chambers—though they gave their pennies toward the saving of souls in dark Africa with a true, even tender emotion, to which most of us are strangers. No; the mothers of 40 or 50 years ago had no theories about improving the world (except the heathen) outside their own respectable doors; but they had strength and patience and tenderness and courage and selflessness. (That I think, would be the name of their ideal—selflessness.) Can we remember that selflessness and see no difference between it and the present feminine individualism?—Margaret Deland in Atlantic.

Willing to Accommodate.

A timid girl, unacquainted with the city, rounded the corner of the Mint arcade and, espying a youth gazing leisurely into one of the shop windows, softly touched him on the shoulder.

The young man turned sullenly around and inquired in a harsh voice what she sought.

Will you kindly tell me the name of that big building over there!" she asked, pointing her index finger at the public buildings.

"Why, that's City Hall, or public buildings, or whatever you want to call it," he answered.

"Well, who occupies it?" she again inquired.

The young man was obviously growing tired and let her question go unanswered.

"May I go up to the top where the statue of the man is!" she asked in a quivering voice.

Throwing out his chest and putting his thumbs in the armholes in his vest he condescendingly replied: "You may this time, but don't you ever ask me again."—Philadelphia Times.

"What has become of that uplift for the farmer?"

"It came to pass all right," replied Mr. Corntossel. "This big boost in prices was exactly the kind of an uplift we needed."

STUDY "PARK PLAN"

Prof. Horschem Extends Plan for Vacation Training

AMES PROFESSORS TO ASSIST

Boys Are Engaged In Farming, Truck Gardening, Stock Raising and a Thousand and One Other Pursuits

Dubuque, Ia., July 30.—Professor Horschem of the Audubon school, who, in the west at least is father of the "Park Plan" life for students in the grades, is preparing to add an extension to the manual training that has been in vogue on the farm near Dubuque, where some forty boys are spending their vacation, engaged in farming, truck gardening, stock raising and the thousand and one ramifications of agriculture which includes practically every trade in existence.

The entire "Park Plan" student list are now at Swiss Valley and the Trappist monastery near Dubuque, where some of the finest stock in the country is produced and there for a week they will study this branch of agriculture.

That the study may be made as comprehensive as possible Prof. H. F. Luick, head of the animal husbandry department, and Prof. G. R. Bliss, head of the horticultural extension department of the Iowa Agricultural college at Ames, will accompany the lads. The week following will be spent at the fish hatchery near Manchester.

Professor Horschem is a strong believer in and advocate of learning to swim by swimming. He believes the boy who attempts to master the intricacies of sailing a boat out of a book stands small chance in a contest with the boy who has learned it by actual sailing. There is nothing along practical lines taught by Prof. Horschem that is not learned by actual participation. The average boy knows that potatoes must be cultivated. Professor Horschem's boys know how to hoe a row of potatoes. They all have done it.

The present is the second year of the "Park Plan" and the arrangement is growing steadily in value to the community and as a practical and remunerative form of vacation for his students. Other expeditions are being planned for the "between seasons" period.

Great Iowa Factories.

Monticello.—The Diamond Creamery building, which was burned here two weeks ago, is being replaced by a much larger structure of concrete blocks, with a concrete foundation and cement floors. The new creamery will measure 60 by 100 feet, and will be one of the largest in the United States.

The new feather factory is also well under way and will be of the same size and material as the creamery. This will be the largest feather factory in the world.

Owasa Road Drag Day Celebration.

Owasa.—Owasa has named Thursday, August 4, as her annual road drag day. Owasa is the home of Peter Ransom, one of the leading road drag enthusiasts in the state. Dr. Ward King, of Maitland, Mo., will be one of the speakers. There will be band music, athletic contests, auto rides, a bowery dance and a merry all around time for all. The event is to be a regular annual affair, like the Sauer Kraut day, the Bean day and other celebration days of other Iowa towns.

Puts Blame on Farmer

Marshalltown.—Because he was fined $25 for selling milk that failed to contain 3 per cent butter fat, J. E. Jackson, a dairyman, caused the arrest of C. H. Hicks, a farmer, of whom Jackson alleges he bought the milk that failed under the test. Jackson will attempt to show that the wholesaler must stand for the the product furnished the retailer, providing that products fails to comply with the pure food laws.

Watch Recovered.

Boone.—Miss Nina Nohanshelt has recovered a gold watch which was stolen from her four years ago in Des Moines. A local jeweler was repairing the time piece when he found Miss Nohanshelt's name engrazed on the case. She was notified. The man who was having it repaired bought it several years ago.

Farm Sells for $50,000.

Creston—A big farm deal was consummated here when the George Herring place just west of the city was sold to J. C. Voorhees of Anita. There are 370 acres in the farm, and the consideration was $50,000, a little more than $135 per acre.

Great Western May Build.

Des Moines, Iowa.—The Chicago, Great Western Railroad company is making a preliminary survey from Des Moines to Clarion, and it is rumored among railroad men that if the company does not construct a road between these two points it will purchase the St. Paul & Des Moines railroad.

The survey is nearly half completed. It is being run almost in a straight line from this city to Clarion. It has long been known that the Great Western wants a shorter line to Des Moines and Kansas City. A branch from Clarion to Des Moines would cut off a considerable distance. The railroad's Chicago to Omaha line passes through Clarion.

Local officials of the Great Western state that they know nothing of any negotiations pending for the Great Western's purchase of the St. Paul & Des Moines, the "short line" road. If the Great Western should acquire the "short line" its use would make the Chicago to Des Moines and Kansas City road much shorter.

President Samuel E. Felton and a party of other Great Western officials were in Des Moines a few days ago, presumably regarding the survey now being made.

Story of Custer Massacre.

Iowa City.—Upon the death of the last Sioux Indian engaged in the Custer massacre, the story of that darkened chapter in American history will be made public. A complete account of the engagement which resulted in the death of every man of Gen. George A. Custer's force is in the hands of Maj. James McLaughlin, chief of the United State Indian service, and of his brother-in-law, Joe Buisson, a half-breed Sioux Indian, and one of the best known pilots and steamboat captains on the upper Mississippi river.

Last Packet Taken Off.

Burlington.—The stage of the river here is six inches above low water mark, the lowest reached since the low water mark record was made in 1864. The steamer Sidney, the only big packet on the river lately, has been taken off the St. Louis-St. Paul trade on account of the low water and through traffic has been abandoned for the first time on record at this period of the year.

Train Killed Iowa Boy.

Atlantic.—Lester Harris, aged 20 years, son of E. E. Harris, a prosperous farmer north of this city, was struck by a Rock Island eastbound fast train as he was returning home after buying some groceries in town, and was instantly killed. His body was thrown forty feet. His horse ran away and stopped in front of the train so Harris had no time to get out of the way.

Big Fire At Lamotte, Iowa.

Dubuque.—Fire destroyed $14,000 worth of property at Lamotte, this county. The losses are: Milwaukee depot and stock yards, $5,000; Cahill Grain elevator and lumber yard, $6,000; Sylvestor Nestor Milq depot and Goodsell milk depot, $400. Two cars of live cattle and hogs $2,000 and other property. The origin of the fire is unknown.

Concrete Bridge Contract.

Ida Grove.—The board of supervisors let the contract for a concrete arch bridge across the Odebolt river at this point. The arch will be 61 feet, the first concrete bridge in Ida county. The board hopes to have every bridge and culvert in the county made out of concrete within ten years.

Catch Escaped Convict.

Oskaloosa.—Isaac Marse, self-acknowledged escaped convict from the penitentiary at Canon City, Colo., was identified here and arrested at a boarding house. Marse confessed he was the man wanted. He made no resistance. A reward had been offered for his capture.

Four Horses Die In Fire.

Ottumwa.—Fire starting in new hay completely destroyed the barn and granary and caused the death of four work horses on the Oscar Brewster farm four miles east of Keosauqua. The loss will aggregate $8,000 and is partially covered by insurance.

Pella Will Have New Water Works.

Pella.—This city will install water works during the present season, and bids for a part of the improvement have already been accepted. The bonds for this improvement, amounting to $60,000, and bearing 5 per cent interest have been sold.

Clear Leake Lnie Incorporates.

Mason City.—The Mason City & Clear Lake railway, operating in this city and a suburban line of ten miles to Clear Lake, the summer resort, have just filed articles of incorporation under the state laws of Delaware for $1,000,000.

The Return of Ferguson.

A night clerk in a hotel sat dozing at his desk at about 1 a. m., when a man in evening clothes came in as if laboriously trying to walk a crack, and said:

"I'm Ferguson; key to room 44."

The guest disappeared in the direction of his room, one flight up. In a few minutes a man in his shirt sleeves with a flattened silk hat on the side of his head, and with one shoe on a foot and the other in his hand, came in and said to the clerk:

"I'm Fershon, key to for-for."

"Mr. Ferguson just took his key and went up."

"Mr. Ferguson just fell out window 'n' left key inside. Kindly lemme have 'nother."—Everybody's.

SCRATCHED SO SHE COULD NOT SLEEP

"I write to tell you how thankful I am for the wonderful Cuticura Remedies. My little niece had eczema for five years and when her mother died I took care of the child. It was all over her face and body, also on her head. She scratched so that she could not sleep nights. I used Cuticura Soap to wash her with and then applied Cuticura Ointment. I did not use quite half the Cuticura Soap and Ointment, together with Cuticura Resolvent, when you could see a change and they cured her nicely. Now she is eleven years old and has never been bothered with eczema since. My friends think it is just great the way the baby was cured by Cuticura. I send you a picture taken when she was about 18 months old.

"She was taken with the eczema when two years old. She was covered with big sores and her mother had all the best doctors and tried all kinds of salves and medicines without effect until we used Cuticura Remedies. Mrs. H. Kiernan, 663 Quincy St., Brooklyn, N. Y., Sept. 27, 1909."

Judges' Wigs.

The wig is only worn by English barristers to give them a stern, judicial appearance, and no one can say that it fails in this respect. The custom was originated by a French judge in the seventeenth century when, happening to don a marquis' wig one day, he found it gave him such a stern and dignified appearance that he decided to get one for himself and wear it at all times in court. This he did, and the result was so satisfactory from a legal point of view, that not only judges, but barristers, also took up the custom throughout Europe.

INHERIT A FORTUNE

Johnson Family to Get Accumulations of New York Relative

THE AMOUNT IS NOT KNOWN

Family Consists of Aged Mother and Three Children, All Residents of Des Moines—Mrs. Johnson Paralyzed.

Des Moines, July 30.—Mrs. Katherine Johnson of 1321 West Fifteenth street and her three children have received word that by the death of a great uncle in New York city the family has fallen heir to a vast fortune. Until they heard that the uncle was dead the Johnsons had heard nothing of their New York relatives for more than twenty years.

The Johnson family in Des Moines is composed of Mrs. Johnson, a son, Albert, 37 years old; a daughter, Julia, 34 years old; and a daughter, Jennie, 30 years old. Julia and Jennie are married brothers, James H. Van Rossum of 1190 Twelfth street, and J. G. Van Rossum, of 1307 Thirteenth street.

Mrs. Johnson is 68 years old. About a month ago she was stricken with paralysis which rendered her almost totally deaf. Attending physicians, however, hold out hope that she may recover and be able to enjoy the great fortune that has fallen to her family.

Nothing definite is known at the present time regarding the amount of the fortune.

Mrs. Johnson could hardly credit the good news. Shaking nervously and quivering with hope she told the history of her family as far back as she could remember.

Addresses by Notable Speakers.

Several notable speakers contributed to make the commencement season at Highland Park College, Des Moines, notable this year. President O. H. Longwell secured Bishop A. W. Quayle, the famous Methodist preacher and Chautauqua lecturer, to deliver the baccalaureate sermon, and Dr. Newell Dwight Hillis, pastor of Plymouth Congregational church of Brooklyn, N. Y., to deliver the principal commencement address. In addition, Dean Frederick Bolton and Forest Ensign, of the Iowa State University, delivered addresses. President Longwell states that the year closing has broken all records in point of attendance, the number reaching almost 2500. This year's graduating class numbers 314 and represents 22 states and three foreign countries. TO MAKE DELICIOUS ICE

Orange Granite Is a New One—More Cooling Than Creams in Summer.

Six oranges, a pint of orange juice, a pound of sugar and a quart of water—these are the materials needed to make a delicious ice. Ices are more cooling than creams in the summer, because the water and sugar and fruit juices digest far more easily and quickly than cream and milk. To make the granite, boil the water and sugar together for five minutes. Peel the oranges, separate the sections, remove seeds, white skin, and every bit of connecting tissue. Throw the pieces of fruit into the hot syrup, stand aside for an hour to cool, and then drain the syrup into the ice cream freezer, add the orange juice and freeze. When frozen stiff mix in the pieces of orange, and serve in glasses.

Mexican Kisses.

Put into a saucepan two cupfuls grated maple sugar or maple syrup and one-half cupful milk. Cook gently until a little dropped in cold water will ball if rubbed between the fingers. It will take ten minutes or a little less to reach this stage. Stir constantly while boiling, as it scorches easily. Add a heaping teaspoonful of butter, and as soon as melted remove from the fire and beat steadily until the mixture looks creamy and slightly granulated. Stir in at once a pound of English walnuts, broken (not chopped) into small pieces. Beat hard and turn into buttered tins to harden.

You can use brown sugar if you have no genuine maple, but add a teaspoonful of the maple flavor that can be purchased at any of the large groceries.

Dropped Biscuits.

At night make up the dough in the usual way for light bread and let it rise over night. In the morning, before kneading it, break off a piece of the dough which you think would be sufficiently large to supply the necessary wants and roll it out the same as you would for the regular yeast powder biscuit, about a quarter of an inch thick. Take a skillet and fill it two-thirds full of good lard, let it get boiling hot, then cut your biscuits out and drop them in. They will puff up and turn brown, leaving a hollow inside. Serve while hot and break open, putting the butter on the inside. Do not cut open.

Spiced Grape Jelly.

Eight quarts of grapes picked from stem, one quart of vinegar (if strong, dilute), two ounces of cinnamon bark, one ounce of whole cloves. Cook well, strain, let stand over night, strain again. To one pint of juice use one pint of sugar.

Asparagus Shortcake.

Make a white sauce and add small pieces of cooked asparagus, pour this over some large baking powder biscuits split hot, serve with hard boiled eggs cut up.

"I love the rose, the violet," said he, with twinkling eye. "I love the blush of early morn and the tinted twilight sky. I love the poetry of life—its charms I won't deny—but there's nothing I love so much as a good big hunk of pie."

Unwarranted.

There seems to be an unwarranted attempt to classify the man who shaves himself with the amateur gardener and the lady who trims her own hats.—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

FATALITY AT MESERVEY

Messenger: The sad news shocked this community last Saturday evening that a little child had been suddenly and accidentally killed by carbolic acid. This terrible blow fell on the home and hearts of Mr. and Mrs. William Hurd who are living on the old McGee place five and a half miles northwest of town.

Mrs. Hurd had placed her infant son, not quite nine months old, on the dining table and was playing with him and did not notice a small bottle of carbolic acid at one end of the table. Unobserved by its mother, the little one quickly seized the bottle and spilled its fiery acid over its tender body from the neck downward. The fatal liquid soon cut short the child's life in spite of every effort to save it.

Be sure and take a bottle of Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhoea Remedy with you when starting on your trip this summer. It cannot be obtained on board the trains or steamers. Changes of water and climate often cause sudden attacks of diarrhoea, and it is best to be prepared. Sold by all dealers.

Do Men Read Beauty Columns?

Your husband, madam, will deny it strenuously if you charge him openly across the breakfast cups with reading the columns in the morning paper devoted to the secrets of feminine beauty But don't be too trustful. If you take the Chicago Record-Herald, as every well-regulated family should, you know all about Mme. Qui Vive's spicy column devoted to "The Woman Beautiful." Well, just watch the good man's eye and see it wander carelessly over to that quarter of the page. Then, if he disappears entirely behind the paper and comes forth with a smile as innocent as that of the cat after swallowing the canary, you may come to your own conclusion. Of course, if caught in the act, he may declare that he only reads the witty epigram with which Mme. Qui Vive heads her column every day. But be not deceived. You know very well that Mme. Qui Vive's whole department is as good as the cream at the top. Will a cat that steals a sip from the cream pitcher suddenly become honest after removing the top layer? No, there is a growing suspicion that a large number of highly respectable men— not all of them married, either—are in the daily habit of reading the beauty columns in the Record-Herald. We are naming no names at present, but the suspected parties are being watched.

Dysentery is a dangerous disease but can be cured. Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhoea Remedy has been successfully used in nine epidemics of dysentery. It has never been known to fail. It is equally valuable for children and adults, and when reduced with water and sweetened, it is pleasant to take. Sold by all dealers.

DEVOE IS NOMINATED

Hancock County Man Nominated for State Superintendent of Public Instruction

WINS ON 2ND BALLOT

Prof. A. M. Devoe, of Garner, was nominated for the office of State Superintendent of Public Instruction by the republicans of Iowa in the state convention held last week in Des Moines. This news brought great satisfaction to all the people of Hancock county, who recognize in Mr. Devoe a man in every way worthy of this high honor. Mr. Devoe led the six other candidates on the first ballot, and was nominated on the second.

We are all sorry to lose Mr. Devoe from the county, but we all congratulate him on his success and are glad he won out.

WHAT OTHERS THINK OF US

That Iowa is attracting the attention of the whole nation politically is sure; and that we are on the right track is clearly set forth by the following editorial from the Chicago Record-Herald:

The Iowa Republicans have spoken and acted with extraordinary boldness and have re-enforced strikingly the message of the Kansas primaries. There is, at any rate, no mealy-mouthed, please-all buncombe in the Iowa platform. It is insurgent sans phrase; it is consistent, coherent, unequivocal.

After the insincere, shuffling deliverances of the Indiana and Ohio conventions such frankness and clearness are politically refreshing. The country knows where Iowa stands and what it demands. It is for protection but against extortion. It is for effective conservation and for opposition to grasping, unfair monopoly. It is for majority rule and for freedom of political opinion within party organizations.

And, we repeat, what Kansas and Iowa want the whole middle West wants. The far West has its own idea of conservation, but it is undoubtedly progressive on all general questions, as are legions of Republicans and Democrats in the East and South. Here and there powerful "regular" machines modify and restrain insurgent tendencies; here and there particularly clever and resourceful leaders carry their followers a few steps further than they would spontaneously go. But, on the whole, the progressive-insurgent movement is neither "Populistic," as some standpatters affect to believe, nor wild, inconsequential and transitory. It is the product of deep causes and it aims at profound and momentous reforms.

Whither would it take us? What will it do with, or to, the existing parties? The answers readily suggest themselves to the level-headed, candid observer. No demoralization or chaos is likely to result; the existing parties will not be destroyed, no new party of bolters and malcontents will be necessary. The existing parties will be revivified, chastened, strengthened.

The moral unrest of the country endangers nothing save cheap opportunism and bourbonism. It will make for sounder and firmer leadership, for more direct and honest issues, for more serious treatment of platform

The "Free" American is the Land Owner

Capital and Labor may war, trusts may flourish and small dealers go to the wall, but the man who owns his land and draws his livlihood from the soil is independent. He doesn't need to worry.

There is no security on the market today as safe for the farmer to buy as good agricultural land.

Put your money in land. It is the safest investment known. You will then own and control your own investment; no dishonest or careless officer can lose your money; it cannot burn up; the broad acres won't run away.

Our farms are in the best agricultural section, where lands are steadily increasing in value.

We are owners and are continually purchasing large tracts of agricultural lands and always have on hand suitable farms for the actual settler or a suitable tract for the speculator. It is our effort to buy only such lands as are practical for actual farming. Our customers who purchased lands from us have uniformly and without exception made money. Write us today for maps and descriptive matter.

A BAD THING TO NEGLECT.

Don't neglect the kidneys when you notice lack of control over the secretions. Passages become too frequent or scanty; urine is discolored and sediment appears. No medicine for such troubles like Doan's Kidney Pills. They quickly remove kidney disorders.

A. Dashem, 241 N. Grant St., Wooster, O., says: "The doctors diagnosed my case as gravel, but my agony increased under their treatment, and I soon became too weak to stand alone. I had given up all hope of living more than a few weeks at the best. I was strongly urged to try Doan's Kidney Pills, and after twelve days' use, I passed two gravel stones. After that, I improved rapidly until cured."

"Yes; but can you call that a side line, Mr. Jones?"

"Technically, it may not be."

A COOL PROPOSITION

And a Sure One.

The Body Does Not Feel Heat Unpleasantly if it has Proper Food—

Grape-Nuts

People can live in a temperature which feels from ten to twenty degrees cooler than their neighbors enjoy, by regulating the diet.

The plan is to avoid meat entirely for breakfast; use a goodly allowance of fruit, either fresh or cooked. Then follow with a saucer containing about four heaping teaspoonfuls of Grape-Nuts, treated with a little rich cream. Add to this about two slices of crisp toast with a meager amount of butter, and one cup of well-made Postum.

By this selection of food the bodily energy is preserved, while the hot, carbonaceous foods have been left out. The result is a very marked difference in the temperature of the body, and to this comfortable condition is added the certainty of ease and perfect digestion, for the food being partially predigested is quickly assimilated by the digestive machinery.

Experience and experiment in food, and its application to the human body has brought out these facts. They can be made use of and add materially to the comfort of the user.

Temporary Chairman Cummins Delivers Keynote Address—Dolliver Defeats J. C. Mabray for Permanent Chairman.

Auditor of state—John L. Bleakly, Ida Grove.
Treasurer of state—W. W. Morrow, Afton.

Clerk supreme court—B. W. Garrett, Leon.
Supreme court reporter—W. W. Cornwall, Spencer.
Railroad commissioners—D. J. Palmer and Clifford Thorne, both of Washington.
Superintendent public instruction—A. M. Deyoe, of Garner.

Des Moines, Aug. 4.—Chairman Carl F. Franke called the Republican state convention to order at 11:30 o'clock yesterday in the Coliseum, and Rev. H. E. Van Horn delivered the invocation.

Joseph R. Fraley of Fort Madison read the official call for the convention.

Chairman Franke, of the Republican State Central Committee, then introduced Senator A. B. Cummins as temporary chairman of the convention. The senator's speech was devoted to a discussion of progressive principles, and he took a strong stand against compromise on vital principles, and attacked the standpat tariff idea.

At the conclusion of Senator Cummins' speech, members of the various committees were named, and a recess taken until 2 o'clock.

Dolliver Permanent Chairman.

On reassembling, Senator Johnathan P. Dolliver and Hon. J. C. Mabray, of Albia, were placed in nomination for permanent chairman. The vote resulted in 834 for Dolliver and 549 for Mabray.

Nominations.

Upon motion of State Senator C. G. Saunders of Council Bluffs Horace E. Deemer of Red Oak and W. D. Evans of Hampton were nominated by acclamation for the supreme court.

A. M. Deyoe of Hancock county was high man on the first ballot for state superintendent. Deyoe had a big lead, but not enough for a majority.

The vote was as follows. Deyoe, 384; Lark, 158½; Heminger, 215; Brainerd, 130½; Welty, 224½; Riggs, 120½; Pickett, 127.

On the second ballot a stampede started for A. M. Deyoe, Polk county giving him 66 votes. Following is the result: A. M. Deyoe, 893; I. C. Welty, 14; A. L. Heminger, 249; F. E. Lark, 17; D. E. Brainerd, 42; John F. Riggs, 3; Adam Pickett, 164.

Deyoe was declared nominated.

The Platform.

The committee on resolutions submitted the following report, which was adopted:

The republicans of Iowa, through their delegates selected according to the law of the state, make the following declaration of their views upon public affairs:

They declare that to deserve the continued support of the people the party should oppose by every means in its power any political encroachments or legislative interference by those who seek to reap extortionate profits through the acquisition of unjust privileges.

Reaffirm National Platform.

They reaffirm their loyalty to the republican national platform of 1908, and pledge themselves to do whatsoever they can to carry every part of it into full effect. They specially emphasize their long and well settled faith in the republican doctrine of protection. Its soundness and wisdom are beyond controversy, and it ought to be accepted as the established policy of the nation. The last republican national platform announced with clearness and precision the rules for its application to imports, and when so applied it safeguards equally the interests of labor and capital, and promotes equally the welfare of the producer and the consumer. They do not recognize the revision of 1909 as a satisfactory fulfillment of the party promise. In order to bring the tariff law into a complete compliance with the rule of the platform it is necessary that the difference between the cost of producing dutiable commodities at home and abroad should be correctly known. Therefore they favor the creation of an independent, nonpartisan tariff commission, which shall be the instrumentality of congress to ascertain the difference between the cost of production here and in other countries, and publish the facts so that not only congress, but the people, shall be advised of the results of its investigations. Until such a commission is authorized they approve the effort of the president to secure the desired information through a board of experts employed for that purpose. They profoundly believe that when the tariff is again revised its schedule should be considered separately, so that each subject can be dealt with upon its own merits, and thus secure fair and impartial action upon the part of congress.

They indorse such efforts as President Taft and his advisers have made to fulfill the promises of the national platform, and which have been in harmony with the declaration of this convention.

Dolliver and Cummins.

They commended to the nation the type of statesmanship exhibited by Senators Dolliver and Cummins, and they heartily indorse their work upon the tariff bill, the railroad bill and the postal savings bill. The patriotic efforts of our senators to protect the public rights from the greed of special interests in national legislation has excited the admiration of the country; their attempt to secure the largest measure of equitable revision in the tariff law was a republican defense of the people's welfare; their insistence determined largely the beneficial features of the railroad law, and it is with pride that the republicans of Iowa recognize the contribution of their chosen representatives to the welfare of the nation.

Revision of House Rules.

They commend the action of the house of representatives in revising its rules giving to the individual member a greater freedom of expression and initiative in the discharge of his duty, and they indorse the contributions of Iowa's representatives to this most important reform.

The republicans of Iowa are the best judges of the republicanism of the senators and representatives whom they send to congress and they resent any attempt to exclude any of them from the honors and privileges which properly attach to membership in the republican party.

State Administration.

In the administration of state affairs a high degree of efficiency on the part of Governor Carroll and of all of his official associates justifies the continued confidence of the people in republican control. Our institutions have been enlarged in scope and improved in character and usefulness, while the levy for state support is being reduced. All the republican candidates for state and congressional office regularly nominated have to their credit such excellent public service and promise that we call upon all republicans to rally to their support and to see that every man on the ticket is triumphantly elected.

Anti-Trust Laws.

The republicans of the United States long ago determined it was essential in a free country to preserve substantial competition in business, and therefore they proposed, and through their influence was enacted, the anti-trust law, the sole object of which was to forbid agreements and conspiracies in restraint of trade, and to prevent monopoly in production and commerce. The republicans of Iowa favor not only the strict enforcement of this law but they believe it should be given additional strength and scope in order to meet the devices of modern industry. Competition must be restored where it has been overcome by unjust or unlawful combinations, and it must be maintained where it still exists. They are not opposed to the mere magnitude of enterprise, but they insist that there shall be such competition as will protect the people against the exactions of unrestrained avarice and greed.

Railroad Regulation.

They congratulate the country upon the success obtained in the regulation of our common carriers, but they feel that there is yet much to be done to secure reasonable rates and charges for the service rendered, and to secure for each community the relative rates and charges to which it is entitled. It is also manifest that much is yet to be done to insure to passengers and employes that measure of safety which the sanctity of human life demands. All common carriers should have fair compensation, but not more. It is clear that to enable the railway commissions, both national and state, to discharge the duties imposed on them by law, a valuation should be made of the physical properties of railway companies in order to secure an effective control of rates and a complete system of accounting.

Postal Savings Bank.

They favor every policy which will encourage habits of thrift and saving among the people, but they believe that the postal savings law recently passed ought to be amended in at least two respects; a definite rule for the designation of postoffices as depositories should be established, and the money gathered at the postoffices in the various communities in which they are established should be kept in the banks of such communities until withdrawn for the purpose of paying depositors, or diverted by the ordinary laws of trade and commerce.

Conservation.

They believe that the conservation of our natural resources is one of the most important duties of the government. The policy is best understood by reference to the often repeated declaration of Theodore Roosevelt, and the republicans of Iowa are in favor of the policy as he has expounded it, and they insist that it shall be carried out by public officers in complete sympathy with his views.

Primary Elections.

They regard with gratification and pride the operation of the primary law in this state. It has brought into actual participation in the selection of candidates thousands where before there were hundreds. The law, in some respects, may be properly amended, but such amendments ought to strengthen the law and not weaken it. They ought to enlarge the power of the individual voter, and not diminish it. The tendency of the times is to give the voter a more potential part in the management of the affairs of the country and they are in hearty sympathy with this tendency.

Temperance.

Under the operation of republican laws in Iowa temperance sentiment has been promoted, temperance territory extended, and saloon influence minimized. While republican control is continued no backward step shall in any degree imperil the moral welfare of the state.

They reiterate their demands for the election of senators of the United States by direct vote, and until the constitution of the United States can be so amended they favor such laws as will most nearly approach that end.

National Conventions.

They believe that the present basis of representation in the republican national convention is unfair and illogical. They insist that there should be equality of influence in the selection of candidates for president and vice president, and they urge upon congress such enactments as will either nominate candidates for president and vice president by direct vote, or for such regulation of national party conventions as will insure representation according to party strength and not according to the representation of the states in congress.

Income Tax.

They believe that the United States should have unquestioned power to levy and collect a tax upon incomes, and therefore they urge the next general assembly of the state of Iowa to ratify the amendment to the constitution now proposed upon that subject.

They believe that the strength and permanence of the nation depends upon the quality of its citizens. Every boy and girl should have the best opportunity possible for education and training, and therefore they favor the prohibition of such child labor as impairs either the mental or physical vigor of children, or which precludes the chance of proper education.

They favor the cooperation of the national government in enlarging the usefulness of the system of public education in the several states by extending the work of the agricultural experiment stations the establishment of secondary schools, which shall include the study of agriculture, domestic science and the mechanic arts, and by aiding the normal schools of the country in the preparation of teachers for such schools.

A Poor Weak Woman

As she is termed, will endure bravely and patiently agonies which a strong man would give way under. The fact is women are more patient than they ought to be under such troubles.

Every woman ought to know that she may obtain the most experienced medical advice free of charge and in absolute confidence and privacy by writing to the World's Dispensary Medical Association, R. V. Pierce, M. D., President, Buffalo, N. Y. Dr. Pierce has been chief consulting physician of the Invalids' Hotel and Surgical Institute, of Buffalo, N. Y., for many years and has had a wider practical experience in the treatment of women's diseases than any other physician in this country. His medicines are world-famous for their astonishing efficacy.

The most perfect remedy ever devised for weak and delicate women is Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription.

IT MAKES WEAK WOMEN STRONG, SICK WOMEN WELL.

The many and varied symptoms of woman's peculiar ailments are fully set forth in Plain English in the People's Medical Adviser (1008 pages), a new revised and up-to-date Edition of which, cloth-bound, will be mailed free on receipt of 31 one-cent stamps to pay cost of mailing only. It Wouldn't Stretch.

The assessor was doing the very best he could, but the farmer was shrewd and wary.

"How many acres of farming land have you?" he inquired warily.

"'Bout 20, I guess," said Reuben.

"Twenty! Why, it looks to me like nearer 120. Come, now, can't you increase that a little? There are surely more than 20 acres in that tract. Suppose you stretch that a little."

"Say, feller," said the farmer, "this ain't no rubber plantation."—Harper's Monthly.

THE BEST OF ITS KIND

Is always advertised, in fact it only pays to advertise good things. When you see an article advertised in this paper year after year you can be absolutely certain that there is merit to it because the continued sale of any article depends upon merit and to keep on advertising one must keep on selling. All good things have imitators, but imitations are not advertised. They have no reputation to sustain, they never expect to have any permanent sale and your dealer would never sell them if he studied your interests. Sixteen years ago Allen's Foot-Ease, the antiseptic Powder for the feet, was first sold, and through newspaper advertising and through people telling each other what a good thing it was for tired and aching feet it has now a permanent sale, and nearly 200 so-called foot powders have been put on the market with the hope of profiting by the reputation which has been built up for Allen's Foot-Ease. When you ask for an article advertised in these papers see that you get it. Avoid substitutes.

Why She Brought It Up.

"Do you remember," she asked, "that you said once that unless I promised to be yours the sun would cease to shine?"

"I don't remember it now, but I suppose I may have said something of the kind."

"And have you forgotten that you assured me that unless I permitted you to claim me as your own the moon would fall from her place in the heavens?"

"Oh, well, what if I did say so? Why do you want to bring that up now?"

"I merely wished to assure you that I'm sorry I didn't shut my eyes and let her fall."

An Unnecessary System.

"You ought to have a burglar alarm system in your house," said the electrical supply agent, "so that you will be awakened if a burglar raises one of the windows or opens a door at night."

"No burglar can get in here while we are peacefully sleeping," replied Mr. Newpop. "We are weaning our baby."

Cleaned Out.

"I can't pay this taxicab bill."

"Then I'll take you to a police station."

"I'll pay it. But take me to the poorhouse and leave me there."—Louisville Courier-Journal.

BANDITS LOOT STAGE

Coach Between Mogollon and Silver City Held Up

DRIVER INSTANTLY KILLED

Jose Dominguez Attempted to Guard Treasure and Was Shot—Robbers Get Twelve Bars of Silver Bullion.

Albuquerque, N. M., Aug. 8.—For the second time within a week the Mogollon-Silver City stage was held up and robbed Saturday, murder being added to the crime in the affair.

Jose Dominguez, the driver, watchful as the result of his experiences the previous week, opened fire on the bandits and brought a volley from their weapons. Several of the bullets pierced his body, killing him instantly.

The robbers hastily gathered up twelve bars of silver bullion, the property of the Erenstine Mining company and the Soccoro Mining company which was being shipped out from the mines, and left the scene.

They met no further resistance, as the stage was making its trip without passengers. When the stage failed to arrive at Glenwood, Jake Rouse, relief driver, was sent out to ascertain the trouble. He came upon the coach, which had been driven several hundred yards from the scene of the robbery by the bandits, and pursuing his search further, found the dead driver lying in the road where his body had been tossed by the robbers.

Returning hastily from the scene of the holdup Rouse passed the word and soon a posse was on the trail of the fleeing bandits. Mounted police took the trail and within a short time found eleven of the twelve silver bars lying at the roadside near where the stage was robbed. Evidently the burden was too great for the robbers and they abandoned all but one bar of the treasure which is valued at about $1,500.

The scene of the robbery is twenty miles from a railroad and in a sparsely settled section of southwestern Socorro county.

CORN AHEAD OF 1909 YIELD

Secretary of Western Grain Dealers' Association Gives Optimistic Figures on Crop Conditions.

Des Moines, Aug. 8.—According to a report of Geo. A. Wells, secretary of the Western Grain Dealers' association, growth conditions of corn in Iowa are better than last year. Up to this time the promise of a bumper crop in the state has been excellent and above the average.

The corn crop in some localities in Iowa is in critical condition because of lack of rainfall and hot temperature and the present prospect may be materally reduced within a week's time unless relieved by rain.

Growth conditions of Iowa corn compared with last year based at 100, follows: North section, 105; central section, 100; south section, 100.

The total oats crop for the United States will exceed the crop of last year by over 100,000,000 bushels. The Iowa yield comparison follows: 1909, 116,100,000 bushels; 1910, 162,000,000 bushels.

M. Palmby was the victim of a bad accident Monday forenoon. He was at Joe Johnson's place helping with threshing. Alex Ross had in some way broken his wagon tongue and Mr. Palmby was helping him to fix it while the horses were hitched to the wagon. Mr. Palmby was working behind the team, when one of the horses kicked, striking him on the right side of the face. His face was badly cut and the cheek bone and upper jaw bone were broken. He has been resting quite easy considering the seriousness of the injury, and we hope that no bad results will follow and that he may make a complete and speedy recovery.

FIFTY THOUSAND KNIGHTS PARADE

Brilliant Climax of Templars' Conclave in Chicago.

TRIENNIAL A BIG SUCCESS.

Acting Grand Master Melish In Command and Noted Masons From Different Parts of the World Present.

Chicago.—Fifty thousand Knights Templar, garbed in the handsome uniform of the order, wearing its glittering jewels and carrying drawn swords, marched through elaborately decorated streets of Chicago Tuesday, Aug. 9, passing beneath great arches and before a reviewing stand four blocks long, crowded with the leading officials of the order and the wives and families of the sir knights. Forty-two brass bands made music for the marchers, and all along the route they were cheered by the thousands of people who had assembled to witness the spectacle.

This magnificent parade was the climax, in a spectacular way, of the thirty-first triennial conclave of Knights Templar, which opened here on Sunday, Aug. 7. In accordance with the time honored custom of the grand encampment, the doings of the week began with divine service.

The sir knights selected Orchestra hall for this purpose and entirely filled the body of that hall to listen to a sermon on "Templarism" delivered by Rev. Dr. George H. MacAdam of Madison, Wis., in the absence of Sir Knight George C. Rafter of Cheyenne, Wyo., very eminent grand prelate of the grand encampment. The music was in charge of the grand organist of the grand commandery of Illinois, the choir consisting of several male quartets belonging to the order in this state.

Monday was devoted mainly to the receiving of the grand and subordinate commanderies and escorting them to their hotels.

Parade of The Knights.

The "grand parade" of Tuesday was the largest parade of Knights Templar ever held. The preparations were elaborate and Michigan boulevard was most elaborately decorated. The sir knights formed in line of march on the boulevard south of Thirty-first street, and signal to move was given by the guns of Battery B, I. N. G., the detachment for the purpose being composed of Knights Templar all of whom are members of the battery. The same detachment fired the salute to the grand master.

Marching northward in Michigan boulevard, the parade passed, near Hubbard court, beneath an entrance arch built in the form of an ancient battlement with its towers and turrets. This was intended to represent the entrance to the city, and as the column passed under it, buglers stationed on its heights heralded the approach of each grand division.

Next the knights came abreast of the first grand stand, one-half mile in length, and this needed no decorations, for it was filled to its capacity mainly with ladies whose beautiful summer costumes made it like a vast garden. About 50,000 persons were in this immense stand, as at its center was a gorgeous throne on which sat the acting grand master, William Bromwell Melish of Cincinnati, who became head of the order on the recent death of Grand Master Henry W. Rugg of Providence, R. I. Mr. Melish will be regularly elected grand master before the close of the conclave.

Just north of the Art Institute the parade passed before another reviewing stand in which were Mayor Busse, the city council and the park commissioners.

Beautiful "Templar Way."

At Washington street the marchers turned west to State, where they entered on the "Templar Way." This stretch extended from Randolph to Van Buren street and was made beautiful by a handsome arch and massive Corinthian columns of pure white erected thirty-three feet apart on both sides of the street. Festoons of natural laurel connected the columns, and the bright red cross and the shield and coat of arms of the order were prominent in the scheme of decoration.

Moving south to Jackson boulevard, the knights again turned west, and near the federal building passed before yet another reviewing stand which accommodated Governor Deneen and his staff. Marching north on La Salle street, the parade passed beneath the grand commandery arch of pure white which spanned the street at the La Salle hotel, the headquarters of the grand commandery of Illinois.

Entrancing Scenes at Night.

The scene in the streets at night was especially beautiful, for all the arches, festoons and columns of the decorative scheme were brilliantly illuminated, and on State street, in addition to the "Templar Way," the merchants had put up decorations that transformed the great shopping district into a veritable fairy land.

Undoubtedly the most spectacular feature of the night display was the wonderful electric set piece erected in Grant park on the lake front, reproducing in colossal size the official emblem or badge of the conclave. It was 150 feet high and its 5,000 powerful electric lights of varied colors brilliantly illuminated all that part of the city.

Much of the success of the conclave must be attributed to the efforts of John D. Cleveland, grand commander of Illinois and president of the triennial executive committee. Arthur MacArthur of Troy, N. Y., is the very eminent grand generalissimo of the grand encampment and W. Frank Pierce of San Francisco the grand captain general.

Among the most noted of the visiting masons from other lands are: The Right Hon. the Earl of Euston, pro grand master of the great priory of England and Wales; the Lord Athlumney, past great constable; Thomas Fraser, great marshal; R. Newton Crane, past great herald; F. C. Van Duzer, past great standard bearer; H. J. Homer, acting grand master banner bearer; John Fergueson, past preceptor of England and Wales, and the Right Hon. Luther B. Archibald, most eminent grand master of the great priory of Canada, and official staff.

The LITTLE BROWN JUG at KILDARE

SYNOPSIS.

Thomas Ardmore and Henry Maine Griswold stumble upon intrigue when the governors of North and South Carolina are reported to have quarreled. Griswold ladies himself with Barbara Osborne, daughter of the governor of South Carolina, while Ardmore espouses the cause of Jerry Dangerfield, daughter of the governor of North Carolina. These two ladies are trying to fill the shoes of their fathers, while the latter are missing. Both states are in a turmoil over one Appleweight, an outlaw with great political influence. Unaware of each other's position, both Griswold and Ardmore set out to make the other prosecute. Both have forces scouting the border. Griswold captures Appleweight, but Jerry finds him and takes him to Ardsley, her own prisoner. Griswold and Barbara, while investigating the outlaw's disappearance, meet Ardmore and Jerry, the latter reveals the presence of Appleweight at Ardsley. Ardmore arrests a man on his property who says he is Gov. Osborne. Meanwhile another man is arrested as Appleweight by the South Carolina militia. The North Carolina militia is called into action. When Gillingwater, Jerry's fiance, finds that real war is afoot, he flees.

CHAPTER XVII.

On the Road to Turner's.

"Who goes there?"

"A jug."

"What kind of a jug?"

"A little brown jug from Kildare."

Thus Mr. Thomas Ardmore tested his pickets with a shibboleth of his own devising. The sturdy militiamen of North Carolina patroled the northern bank of Raccoon creek at midnight, aware that riotous flood alone separated them from their foes. The terraces at Ardsley bristled with the guns of the First Light battery, while, upon a cot in the wine cellar beneath, Mr. Bill Appleweight, alias Poteet, slept the sleep of the just.

He was rudely aroused, however, at one o'clock in the morning by Ardmore, Cooke and Collins, and taken out through the kitchen to one of the Ardsley farm wagons. Big Paul held the reins, and four of Cooke's detectives were mounted as escort. Ardmore, Cooke and Collins were to accompany the party as a board of strategy in the movement upon Turner Court House, South Carolina.

Appleweight, the terror of the border, blinked at the lanterns that flashed about him in the courtyard. He had been numbed by his imprisonment, and even now he yielded himself docilely to the inevitable. His capture in the first instance at Mount Nebo had been clear enough, and he could have placed his hand on the men who did it if he had been free for a couple of hours. This he had pondered over his solacing solitaire as he sat on the case of Chateau Bizet in the Ardsley wine cellar; but the subsequent events had been altogether too much for him. He had been taken from his original captors by a girl, and while the ignominy of this was not lost on the outlaw, his wits had been unequal to the further fact, which he had no ground for disbelieving, that this captivity within the walls of Ardsley had been due to a daughter of that very governor of North Carolina whom he had counted his friend.

"The road between Kildare and Turner's is fairly good," announced Cooke, "though we've got to travel four miles to strike it. Griswold evidently thinks that holding the creek is all there is of this business, and he won't find out till morning that we've crawled round his line and placed Appleweight in jail at Turner's, where he belongs."

"You must have a good story ready for the press, Collins," said Ardmore. "The North Carolina border counties don't want Appleweight injured, and Gov. Dangerfield don't want any harm to come to him—you may be sure of that, or Bill would have been doing time long ago."

"Gentlemen, it was very impolite of you not to tell me you were ready to start!" and Jerry came briskly from the side entrance, dressed for the saddle and nibbling a biscuit.

"But you are not to go! I thought that was understood!" cried Ardmore.

"It may have been understood by you, Mr. Ardmore, but not by me! I should never forgive myself if, after all the trouble I have taken to straighten out this little matter, I should not be in at the finish. Will you kindly get me a horse?"

Miss Dangerfield's resolution was not to be shaken, and a few minutes later the party moved out from the courtyard. Cooke rode several hundred yards ahead; then two detectives preceded the wagon, in which Appleweight sat on a cross-seat with two more of Cooke's men on a seat just behind him. He was tied and gagged, and an old derby hat (supplied by Paul) had been clapped upon the side of his head at an angle that gave him a jaunty air belied by his bonds. Though his tongue was silenced, his eyes were at once eloquent of wonderment, resignation and impotent rage. Beside the wagon rode Miss Jerry Dangerfield, alert and contented. Ardmore and Collins were immediately behind her, and she indulged the journalist in some mild chaff from time to time, to his infinite delight, though considerably to Ardmore's distress of heart; for, though no words had passed between him and Jerry as to the disgraceful flight of the adjutant general, yet the master of Ardsley was in a jealous mood. The moon had left the conspirators to the softer radiance of the stars, but there was sufficient light for Ardmore to mark the gentle lines of Jerry's face, as she lifted it now and then to scan the bright globes above.

Paul drove his team at a trot over the smooth road of the estate to a remote and little-used gate on the southern side, but still safely removed from the South Carolina pickets along the Raccoon.

"It's all right over there," remarked Collins, jerking his head toward the creek. "The fronting armies are waiting for morning and battle. I suppose that when we send word to Griswold that Appleweight is in a South Carolina jail it will change the scene of operations. It will then be Gov. Osborne's painful task to dance between law-and-order sentiment and the loud cursing of his border constituents. The possibilities of this rumpus grow on me, Ardmore."

Sturdy Militiamen Patroled the Northern Bank of Raccoon Creek.

"There is no rumpus, Mr. Collins," said Jerry over her shoulder. "The governor of North Carolina is merely giving expression to his civic pride and virtue."

Leaving Ardsley, they followed a dismal stretch of road until they reached the highway that connects Turner's and Kildare.

"It's going to be morning pretty soon. We must get the prisoner into Turner's by five o'clock. Trot 'em up, Paul," ordered Cooke.

They were all in capital spirits, with a fairly good road before them, leading straight to Turner's, and with no expectation of any trouble in landing their prisoner safely in jail.

They were well into South Carolina territory now, and were jogging on at a sharp trot, when suddenly Cooke turned back and halted the wagon.

"There's something coming—wait!"

"Maybe Bill's friends are out looking for him," suggested Collins.

Cooke impatiently bade them be quiet.

"If we're accosted, what shall we say?" he asked.

"We'll say," replied Jerry instantly, "that one of the laborers at Ardsley is dead, and that we are taking his remains to his wife's family at Turner's. I shall be his grief-stricken widow."

The guards already had Appleweight down on the floor of the wagon, where one of them sat on his feet to make sure he did not create a disturbance. At her own suggestion Jerry dismounted and climbed into the wagon, where she sat on the side board, with her head deeply bowed as though in grief.

"Pretty picture of a sorrowing widow," mumbled Collins. Ardmore punched him in the ribs to make him stop laughing. To the quick step of walking horses ahead of them was now added the whisper and creak of leather.

"Hello, there!" yelled Cooke, wishing to take the initiative.

"Hey-O!" answered a voice, and all was still.

"Give up the road; we're taking a body into Turner's to catch the morning train," called Cooke.

"Who's dead?"

"One of Ardmore's Dutchmen. Shipping the corpse back to Germany."

The party ahead of them paused as though debating the case.

The north-bound party was a blur in the road. Their horses sniffed and moved restlessly about as their riders conferred.

"Give us the road!" shouted Cooke. "We haven't much time to catch our train."

"Who did you say was dead?"

"Karl Schmidt," returned Paul promptly.

Ardmore's heart sank, fearful lest an inspection of the corpse should be proposed. But at this moment a wail, eerie and heart-breaking, rose and fell dismally upon the night. It was Jerry mourning her dead husband, her slight figure swaying back and forth over his body in an abandon of grief.

"De poor vidow—she be mit us," called out big Paul, forsaking his usual excellent English for guttural dialect.

"Who are you fellows?" demanded Cooke, spurring his horse forward. The horsemen, to his surprise, seemed to draw back, and he heard a voice speak out sharply, followed by a regrouping of the riders at the side of the road.

"We been to a dance at Turner's, and air goin' back home to Kildare," came the reply.

"That seems all right," whispered Ardmore to Collins.

"Thus," muttered Collins, "in the midst of death we are in life," and this, reaching Jerry, caused her to bend over the corpse at her feet as though in a convulsive spasm of sorrow, whereupon, to add color to their story, Paul rumbled off a few consolatory sentences in German.

"Give us the road!" commanded Cooke, and without further parley they started ahead, closing about the wagon to diminish, as far as possible, the size of the caravan. Paul kept the horses at a walk, as became their sad errand, and Jerry continued to weep dolorously.

They passed the horsemen at a slight rise in the rolling road. The party bound for Turner's moved steadily forward, the horsemen huddled about the wagon, with Jerry's led horse between Ardmore and Collins at the rear. At the top of the knoll hung the returning dancers, well to the left of the road, permitting with due respect the passing of the funeral party. One of them, Ardmore could have sworn, lifted his hat until the wagon had passed. Then some one called good night, and, looking back, Ardmore saw them—a dozen men, he judged—regain the road and quietly resume their journey toward Kildare.

"Pretty peaceable for fellows who've been attending a dance," suggested Collins, craning his neck to look after them.

"One fellow lifted his hat as we passed, and I thought—"

"Well, what did you think, Mr. Ardmore?" demanded Cooke impatiently.

"Well, it may seem strange, but I thought there was something about that chap that suggested Grissy."

They paused to allow Jerry to resume her horse, and one of the detectives joined in the conference to venture his opinion that the men they had passed were in uniform. "They looked like militia to me," and as he was a careful man, Cooke took note of his remark, though he made no comment.

But as they moved on toward Turner's, Ardmore was still troubled over what had seemed to him the remarkable Parisian courtesy of the returning reveler who had lifted his hat as the corpse passed. Grissy, he kept saying over and over to himself, was no fool by any manner of means, and he was unable to conjecture why the associate professor of admiralty, known to be detached on special duty for the governor of South Carolina, should be riding to Kildare, unless he contemplated some coup of importance.

The stars paled under the growing light of the early summer dawn. Appleweight, with shoulders wearily drooping, contemplated the attending cortege with the gaze of one who sullenly accepts a condition he does not in the least understand.

A few early risers saw the strange company enter and proceed to the jail; but before half the community had breakfasted, Bill Appleweight, the outlaw, was securely locked in jail in Turner Court House, the seat of Mingo county, in the state of South Carolina, and the jailer, moreover, was sharing the distinguished captive's thraldom.

Stewardship of Wealth.

There is no people in the world like the American in the number of men and women who look upon their title to wealth as involving stewardship and disposition of income and principal for public ends. During the last 17 years the amount of gifts, in sums of $5,000 or more, to religious, educational, philanthropic and civic causes, has been many millions over a billion dollars, the record for the year just closing amounting to $141,250,000, or $40,000,000 more than during any previous year. Add to this the enormous sum that is given each year in sums smaller than $5,000, given either as regular contributions to religious, educational and charitable causes, or left as bequests for the same "uplift" ends, and it begins to appear why the agitator against wealth, as in of itself a pernicious thing, finds this country less favorable to his revolutionary propaganda than he wishes it were.

The Eggman In Philadelphia.

A young farmer from Clementon, N. J., was selling eggs at the corner of Fourth and South streets when a bartender walked up to him and asked him the price of a dozen eggs. The farmer answered: "Forty cents a dozen," and as there was an extra egg in the dozen he wanted three cents extra, but the bartender wanted it "thrown in with the bargain."

"Well," said the one who sells the liquor, "I will take the egg and treat you to a drink."

"All right," said the farmer. When they came to the tavern he was asked what he would drink, to which he replied:

"Well, I allus drink sherry with an egg in it."

And they say farmers buy gold bricks.—Philadelphia Times.

Holding Down Brutality.

No longer are we having brutal war to lick us into shape. All the rude brutality of the peasant hordes of Europe, still the primitive type of man, is here to be handled—brutality which war and the sword have kept subdued into a sort of fierce gentleness for 2,000 years; now this Pandora's box of latent savagery, which has been fearfully held down by iron imperialism, is turned loose to hell and havoc, if not tamed and disciplined by education and gentling thought. By peasant blood I mean you and me, for after all is said there is no drop of straight nobility or gentry blood in this land.—New York Press.

Rice Market Yields $200,000,000.

The world's market for rice, measuring this market merely by the imports of the principal countries of the world, amounts to from $150,000,000 to $200,000,000 per annum. The imports of rice into the principal countries of Europe in the latest available year amounted to about $82,000,000 value; into Asia and Oceanica, $88,000,000; into North and South America, exclusive of the United States, $12,000,000, and into Africa, $6,000,000.

Specifically, it will give us, within a few years, a nonpolitical and expert tariff commission, revision of separate schedules without log-rolling and business disturbance, popular election of senators, efficient and systematic statutes for the prevention of economic abuses and the protection of consumers and legitimate business against greed, frenzied finance and monopoly.

And these, even to the conservatives who are just now bewildered or alarmed, should on reflection appear as consummations devoutly to be wished in this republic, dedicated as it is to democracy, equal opportunity and civil liberty.

A Wonderful News Service

Have you ever paused to think what a marvelous organization must be necessary to lay before you each day an accurate account of the happenings of yesterday in Europe, Asia, Africa, South America, Australia, the islands of the sea and the whole expanse of our own continent, all in a single newspaper? The intricate network of cables and telegraph lines, the complicated chain of news gathering agencies stretching across continents and oceans, the innumerable reporters working daily for you under tropic suns and over arctic snows—have you ever felt the romantic thrill of it all in reading a great modern newspaper such as the Chicago Record-Herald? We mention this paper especially because of the completeness of its domestic and foreign news service. It has a correspondent in every town or city of importance in the United States, a veritable army of them in all. In addition it has the benefit of the foreign news service of the New York Herald, famous for its world wide cable system and for the reliability of its foreign news: also that of the New York World and the New York Journal of Commerce, besides that of the great co-operative news-gathering organization, the Associated Press. With such a vast and complete news service it is not strange that the Record Herald so easily holds its own as one of the great newspapers of the world.

ALGONA MAN FOUND DEAD

Henry Miller, a resident of Algona, was found dead by the side of the road near the railroad track. T. J. Vincent found the body and immediately reported to the proper authorities. There were no marks or bruises on his person and a verdict was reached that he came to his death from heart failure. He was a man 62 years of age and highly esteemed.

SHADE TREES ARE DYING

It is reported that many of the beautiful trees in and around Charles City are dying and so great is the havoc that it has become alarming. It was first thought that it might be caused by the drouth, but when it was examined into it was found that the earth was well watered beneath. Then it was the gas that escaped from the pipes about the city and that theory is about exploded. Now it is believed to be the work of ants or a white grub that perforates the tree at the base and destroys the sap ducts. It is not only bothering at Charles City, but other parts of the state seem to be suffering. It is most severe on elm trees.

FATAL ACCIDENT IN KOSSUTH

Miss Dora Huschka, daughter of John Huschka who resides at St. Benedict in Kossuth county, met with a terrible death when she attempted to start a fire with kerosene. The stove was warm and she poured the oil on the wood, which quickly generated gas. When she went to use a match there was a fearful explosion which caught her dress on fire. The girl's clothing was entirely burned from her back, and she died about two hours after the accident. She was 13 years old.

One of the longest and most romantic man hunts in police annals was terminated a few days ago when Dr. Crippen and his stenographer, Miss Leneve, were arrested on the arrival of the steamship Montrose at Quebec. The pair are charged with the murder of Dr. Crippen's wife and were chased across the ocean by a representative of the famous Scotland Yard detective office. The romantic element was injected into the case by means of the wireless telegraph by which the couple were identified in mid-ocean and by which the officers were kept posted of all movements. Newspaper correspondents sent developments broadcast over the world so that the only people who were in ignorance of the anticipated arrest were the two principals on board ship. Wireless telegraphy has proved its value during the past year in many ways. It has prevented several ocean disasters, rescued shipwrecks and now plays a part in apprehending criminals who are seeking to escape from justice.—Homestead.

The "Free" American is the Land Owner

Capital and Labor may war, trusts may flourish and small dealers go to the wall, but the man who owns his land and draws his livlihood from the soil is independent. He doesn't need to worry.

There is no security on the market today as safe for the farmer to buy as good agricultural land.

Put your money in land. It is the safest investment known. You will then own and control your own investment; no dishonest or careless officer can lose your money; it cannot burn up; the broad acres won't run away.

Our farms are in the best agricultural section, where lands are steadily increasing in value.

We are owners and are continually purchasing large tracts of agricultural lands and always have on hand suitable farms for the actual settler or a suitable tract for the speculator. It is our effort to buy only such lands as are practical for actual farming. Our customers who purchased lands from us have uniformly and without exception made money. "John D. Rockefeller, charged with speeding an automobile, pleaded guilty and was fined five dollars and costs, amounting to three dollars." Mayor Gaynor's fight for life in St. Mary's hospital in Hoboken, where he has been confined since the attempted assassination as he was about to depart for Europe, has reached the critical stage. All that could be gleaned by the statements by the attending physimians was that the minimum time in which the infection in the wound might appear had elapsed. This means that the period of greatest danger from blood poisoning is just being entered upon.

The "Old Master" has taken the final count. Joe Gans, former lightweight champion of the world, died at Baltimore of consumption. The most popular and most skillful negro boxer who ever appeared before the public, a favorite for close on twenty years, died, as he wished to—in the arms of his mother.

Victor Berger, the Milwaukee Socialist leader, before sailing for Europe, declared that all wars could be ended through the medium of strikes.

CROCKER'S BRIGADE

Officers Issue Call for Fifteenth Biennial Reunion

AT WASHINGTON, IA., SEP. 14-16

Increasing Attendance of Wives, Sons and Daughters of Members at Reunions Commended, and Presence Requested.

Council Bluffs, Aug. 13.—D. W. Bushnell, corresponding secretary for the Society of Crocker's Brigade, has sent out the call for the fifteenth biennial reunion of the brigade at Washington, Ia., Sept. 14-15. The call is as follows:

"All soldiers who have at any time served in the 'Iowa Brigade,' composed of the Eleventh, Thirteenth, Fifteenth and Sixteenth Iowa Infantry volunteers, are by the constitution entitled to membership and are cordially invited and urged to attend.

"Regimental meetings at 1:30 p. m. Wednesday.

"All arrangements for the meeting will be in charge of a local committee in Washington.

"A second circular will be sent out, giving full information and instruction as to hotel rates and railroad connections.

"The Silver Oak Leaf Badge of the society and the engraved certificate of membership can be procured at the reunion or by addressing C. W. Kepler, recording secretary, Mount Vernon, Ia. The price of each is $1.00.

"Notices of the death of members since our last meeting, with dates and other incidents, and of change of postoffice address of members, should be sent to D. W. Bushnell, corresponding secretary, Council Bluffs, Ia.

"Owing to conditions which all our members will recognize, we urge the president and secretaries of the regiments and all comrades by correspondence and personal effort to urge the attendance of all members. This year we will not send out our notice to the various newspapers, asking them to publish it, but instead of that we want every member to see his local newspaper in his vicinity and see to it that they give notice of the meeting in good form in their columns. In that way we will reach a greater number of comrades. Be sure and attend to this.

"The increasing attendance of wives, sons and daughters of members upon our reunions is cordially commended, and their presence in greater numbers than ever at our fifteenth biennial meeting is earnestly requested.

"The ties of 'Fraternity, Charity and Loyalty' which bound the brigade in its unbroken service as an organization from April, 1862, to July, 1865, and the spirit of comradeship which has marked its reunions for thirty years, assure us that despite the lapse of time and the loss of loved and honored members, the brigade will come together at the city of Washington with undiminished numbers.

Files Suit for Divorce.

Marshalltown.—A distinct sensation was created here when Mrs. Phebe Gifford, wife of Frank H. Gifford, a saloonist of the city and known widely throughout Iowa, brought suit for divorce, claiming cruel and inhuman treatment. The Giffords were married in Council Bluffs, June 18, 1885. Gifford has been running three saloons here and all were in his wife's name. Gifford is worth close to $60,000, and Mrs. Gifford asks an equitable division of the property. Gifford claims that his mother-in-law, Mrs. M. G. Capson, proprietor of the Monroe hotel, Grinnell, is responsible for the estrangement.

Packet Sticks on Bar.

Burlington.—For the first time in the history of the upper Mississippi river navigation one of the through line packets was unable to get from St. Louis to Burlington. The Dubuque, after sticking on a sand bar below Fort Madison five hours, finally found it was impossible to get further north at the present stage and turned back to St. Louis. The stage of water is one-half inch below all records of low water. Service by all the larger packets has been abandoned for the first time in history in the middle of the river season.

Plan New Drainage Ditch.

Logan.—The supervisors of Harrison county have appointed J. C. McCabe, engineer, Frank McEwen and A. H. Van Scoy, commissioners to appraise the benefits and damages of the Soldier river drainage district. The Soldier river drainage district embraces 30,000 acres of land of unsurpassed fertlity, but subject to overflow from the flood water of the stream which has filled and abandoned its bed in reaches on the Missouri bottoms. The engineering project contemplates the complete deflection of the stream at the point of overflow in the lower part of Jackson township, thence in a southwesterly direction 6.6 miles to the Missouri river. The new channel for the Soldier river, with laterals, according to estimate of Engineer Wattles of Missouri Valley, will cost the land owners $105,000.

Eloper Caught; Hangs Himself.

Fonda.—Herman Shuman, a prominent young farmer, living northwest of here committed suicide Monday in the city jail by hanging himself with his belt. Young Shuman had been keeping company with his niece, Miss Bessie Shuman for about a year. Sunday they started for the German church and no more had been seen of them until the sheriff captured them at Arnold's park. They were brought to Fonda on the morning train. Shuman was lodged in the city jail for safe keeping until the arrival of the west bound train for Storm Lake where he was to be kept until time for his trial. The young couple had eloped with the intention of getting married. Both come from well respected families. Shuman was farming for himself, while his mother was living with him. His age was 21, while the girl was only 16.

Clark Family in Lead.

Mason City.—The Smith and Jones families have been relegated clear to the rear in this county and now it is the Clark family that are having their innings. If you are in trouble the case will be heard by Judge Joseph J. Clark of the district court. If an arrest is to be made it is Charles I. Clark that is sheriff. When the decision is reached it is County Clerk E. W. Clark, who will read the verdict, and when the jurors come to draw their pay it is Auditor A. S. Clark who will draw the warrant. Such an array of Clarks or of any other family is something new in the political kingdom.

Asks Bonus of Fort Dodge.

Fort Dodge.—In order to rebuild their plant, which was almost completely destroyed by fire the directors of the Corn Belt Packing company at a dinner tendered by the Commercial club, asked $1,500 bonus. The club is endeavoring to raise this amount, and it is thought the rebuilding will commence soon. The bonus will be used to furnish adequate fire protection, either by the installation of a sprinkler system or by constructing the plant of reinforced concrete.

Iowa City Has a Skunk Farm

Iowa City.—The day of the meek, lowly and despised skunk has come. Carver W. Thompson, an Iowa City merchant, has established a skunk farm at Butler's Landing, near town, and has devoted four acres to this enterprise. A large "crop" will be harvested in December and the returns, from hides, fur and skunk oil, it is believed, will be large. Skunk farms in Iowa are limited, but have produced great returns for the few investors to date.

Luther League Session Ends.

Estherville.—The ninth annual convention of the Northern Iowa and Southern Missouri Luther league closed a very profitable and interesting session at Emmetsburg. The following officers were elected for the coming year. President, Harry R. Tosdal, Estherville; secretary, Elvin Kettleson, Jackson, Minn.; corresponding secretary, Alma Bergum, Graettinger; treasurer, Melvin Shanger, Emmetsburg.

Aged Bride Wants to Quit.

Creston.—Mrs. Sarah Fitzgerald has begun action in the district court for divorce from her husband, Thomas Fitzgerald. The couple were married June 4 and have come to the conclusion their attempt at connubial bliss is a mistake. Both had had matrimonial experience previously, Mrs. Fitzgerald being 68 years old and her husband 78.

Finds a $400 Pearl.

Iowa City.—A pearl weighing forty four grains and valued by Iowa City jewelers at $400, was brought to the city by Maj. L. J. Rowell of Tipton. He found it in a clam in the nearly dry bed of the Cedar river, near Rochester, where his family is camping.

SYNOPSIS.

Thomas Ardmore and Henry Maine Griswold stumble upon intrigue when the governors of North and South Carolina are reported to have quarreled. Griswold ingratiates himself with Barbara Osborne, daughter of the governor of South Carolina, while Ardmore espouses the cause of Jerry Dangerfield, daughter of the governor of North Carolina. These two ladies are trying to fill the shoes of their fathers, while the latter are missing. Both states are in a turmoil over one Appleweight, an outlaw with great political influence. Unaware of each other's position, both Griswold and Ardmore set out to make the other prosecute. Both have forces scouting the border. Griswold captures Appleweight, but Jerry finds him and takes him to Ardsley, her own prisoner. Ardmore arrests a man on his property who says he is Gov. Osborne. Meanwhile another man is arrested as Appleweight by the South Carolina militia. The North Carolina militia is called into action. When Col. Gillingwater, Jerry's fiance, finds that real war is afoot, he flees. Appleweight is taken secretly by Ardmore and lodged in a jail in South Carolina.

CHAPTER XVIII.

The Battle of the Raccoon.

Mrs. Atchison met the returning adventurers at the door.

"Your conduct, Jerry Dangerfield, is beyond words!" she exclaimed, seizing the girl's hands. "And so you really locked that horrid person in a real jail! Well, we shan't miss him! We have been kept up all night by the arrival here of other prisoners—brought in like parcels from the grocer's."

"More prisoners!" shouted Ardmore.

The captain of the battery whose guns frowned upon the terraces came up and saluted.

"Mr. Ardmore," he said, "I have been trying for several hours to see Gov. Dangerfield, but this lady tells me that he has left Ardsley."

"That is quite true; the governor was called away last night on official business, and he will not return for an hour or two. You will kindly state your business to me."

The captain was peevish from loss of sleep, and by no means certain that he cared to transact business with Mr. Ardmore. He glanced at Miss Dangerfield, whom he had met at Raleigh, and the governor's daughter met the situation promptly.

"Capt. Webb, what prisoners have you taken, and why are they not gagged to prevent this hideous noise?"

Seemingly from beneath the ample porte-cochere, where this colloquy occurred, rose yells, groans and curses, and the sound of thumps, as of the impact of human bodies against remote subterranean doors.

"They're trying to get loose, Miss Dangerfield, and they refuse to stay tied. The fiercest row is from the fellows we chucked into the coal bins."

"It's excellent anthracite, the best I can buy; they ought to be glad it isn't soft coal," replied Ardmore defensively. "Who are they?"

"They're newspaper men, and they're most terribly enraged," answered Capt. Webb. "We picked them up one at a time in different places on the estate. They say they're down here looking for Gov. Dangerfield."

"You have done well, Capt. Webb," said Jerry with dignity, "and I shall urge your promotion upon papa at the earliest moment possible. Are these newspaper gentlemen your only prisoners?"

"No; we gathered up two other parties, and one of them is in the servants' laundry; the other, a middle-aged person, I locked in the tower, where he can enjoy the scenery. The prisoner up there made an awful rumpus. He declares he will ruin the whole state of North Carolina for this. Here is his card, which, in a comparatively lucid interval, he gave me to hand you at the earliest possible moment," and Capt. Webb placed a visiting card in Ardmore's hands.

A smile struggled for possession of Ardmore's countenance, but he regained control of himself promptly, and his face grew severe.

He gave the card to Jerry, who handed it to Mrs. Atchison, and that lady laughed merrily.

"Your prisoner, Capt. Webb, is George P. Billings, secretary of the Bronx Loan and Trust Company of New York. What was he doing when you seized him?" demanded Ardmore.

"He was chasing the gentleman who's resting on the anthracite. He chased him and chased him, around a teahouse out here somewhere on the place; and finally this person in the coal hole fell, and they both rolled over together. The gentleman in the coal hole declares that he's Foster, the state treasurer of North Carolina, but his face got so scratched on the shrubbery that he doesn't look in the least like Mr. Foster."

"I have sent him witch hazel and court plaster, and we can get a doctor for his wounds, if necessary," said Mrs. Atchison.

A sergeant rushed up in hot haste with a demand from Col. Daubenspeck, of the North Carolina First, to know when Gov. Dangerfield could be seen.

"The South Carolina pickets have been withdrawn, and our officers want orders from the governor in person," said the messenger.

"Then they shall have orders," roared Ardmore. "If our men dare abandon their outposts—"

He turned and rode furiously toward the border, and in his rage he had traversed a thousand yards before he saw that Jerry was close behind him. As they passed the red bungalow the crack of scattering rifle-shots reached them.

"Go back! Go back! The war's begun!" cried Ardmore; but, though he quickened the pace of his horse, Jerry clung to his side.

"If there's war, and I hope there is, I shall not shrink from the firing line, Mr. Ardmore."

As they dashed into their own lines they came upon the regimental officers, seated in comfortable chairs from the red bungalow, calmly engaged in a game of cards.

"Great God, men!" blurted Ardmore, "why do you sit here when the state's honor is threatened? Where was that firing?"

"You seem rather placid, gentlemen, to say the least," added Jerry, coldly bowing to the officers, who had risen at her approach. "Unless I am greatly mistaken, that is the flag of South Carolina I see flaunted in yonder field." And she pointed with a gauntleted hand to a palmetto flag beyond the creek.

"It is, Miss Dangerfield," replied the colonel politely, "and you can see their pickets occasionally, but they have been drawn back from the creek, and I apprehend no immediate advance."

"Advance! Who are we to wait for them to offer battle? Who are we to play bridge and wait upon the pleasure of a cowardly enemy?" and Jerry gazed upon the furious Ardmore with admiration, as he roared at the officers, who stood holding their caps deferentially before the daughter of their commander-in-chief.

"I don't think it would be quite fair," said the colonel mildly, "to force issues to-day."

"Not force issues!" yelled Ardmore. "With your brave sons of our Old North State, not to force battle! In the name of the constitution, I ask you, why not?"

"For the reason," replied the colonel, "that the South Carolina troops ate heavily of green apples last night in an orchard over there by their camp, and they have barely enough men to maintain their pickets this morning. These, you can see, they have withdrawn a considerable distance from the creek."

"Then tell me why they have been firing upon our lines? Why have they been permitted to shoot at our helpless and unresisting men if they are not ready for war?"

"They were not shooting at our men, Mr. Ardmore. Their pickets are very tired from loss of sleep, and they were trying to keep awake by shooting at a buzzard that hung over a field yonder, where there is, our scouts inform us, a dead calf lying in one of your pastures."

"They shall have better meat! Buzzards shall eat the whole state of South Carolina before night! Colonel, I order you to prepare at once to move your troops across that creek."

A moment later the clear notes of the bugle rose above the splash and bubble of the creek. There was no opportunity for a grand onward sweep; it must be a scramble for the southern shore over the rocks and fallen timber in that mad torrent.

Jerry Dangerfield, seated upon her horse on a slight rise under a clump of trees a little way back from the stream, coolly munched a cracker and sipped coffee from a tincup. Ardmore, again calm, now that Daubenspeck had been spurred to action, smoked his pipe and watched the army prepare to advance.

One gun from the battery was brought down and placed on a slight eminence to support the advance, for which all was now in readiness. The bugle sang again, and the men of one company sprang forward and began leaping from rock to rock, silently, steadily moving upon the farther shore. Here and there some brown khaki-clad figure slipped and splashed into the stream with a wild confusion of brown leggings; but on they went intrepidly. The captain, leading his men through the torrent, was the first to gain the southern shore. He waved his sword, and with a shout his men clambered up the bank and formed in neat alignment. This was hardly accomplished before a uniformed figure dashed from a neighboring blackberry thicket and waved a white handkerchief. He bore something in his hand, which to Ardmore's straining vision seemed to be a small wicker basket.

"It's a flag of truce!" exclaimed Col. Daubenspeck, and a sigh that expressed incontestable relief broke from that officer.

"The cowards!" cried Ardmore. "Does that mean they won't fight?"

"It means that hostilities must cease until we have permitted the bearer of the flag to carry his message into our lines."

The bearer of the basket gained the North Carolina shore and strode rapidly toward Miss Dangerfield, Ardmore and Col. Daubenspeck. He handed the trifle of a basket to the colonel, who gazed upon its contents for a moment with unspeakable rage. The color mounted in his neck almost to the point of apoplexy, and his voice bellowed forth an oath so bleak, so fraught with peril to the human race, that Jerry shuddered and turned away her head as from a blast of flame. The colonel cast the wicker basket from him with a force that nearly tore him from his saddle. It struck against a tree, spilling upon the earth six small, hard, bright green apples.

"My letter," said the emissary soberly, "is for Mr. Thomas Ardmore, and, unless I am mistaken, you are that gentleman."

Ardmore seized a long envelope which the man extended, tore it open, and read:

Thomas Ardmore, Esq.,
Acting Governor of North Carolina,
In the Field:

Sir: As I understand the present unhappy differences between the states of North and South Carolina, they are due to a reluctance on the part of the governor of North Carolina to take steps toward bringing to proper punishment in North Carolina an outlaw named Appleweight. I have the honor to inform you that that person is now in jail at Kildare, Dilwell county, North Carolina, properly guarded by men who will not flinch. If necessary I will support them with every South Carolinian able to bear arms. This being the case, a casus belli no longer exists, and to prevent the effusion of blood I beg you to cease your hostile demonstrations on our frontier.

Our men seized a few prisoners during the night, and I am willing to meet you to arrange an exchange on the terms proper in such cases.

I am, sir, your obedient servant,
HENRY MAINE GRISWOLD,
For the Governor of South Carolina.

"The nerve of it! The sublime cheek of it!" exclaimed Ardmore, though the sight of Griswold's well-known handwriting had shaken him for the moment.

"As a bluffer your little friend is quite a wonder," was Jerry's only comment when she had read the letter.

Ardmore promptly wrote on the back of Griswold's letter this reply:

Henry Maine Griswold, Esq.,
Assistant Professor of Admiralty,
Camp Buzzard, S. C.:

Sir: Appleweight is under strong guard in the jail at Turner court house, Mingo county, South Carolina. I shall take pleasure in meeting you at Ardsley at five o'clock this afternoon for the proposed exchange of prisoners. To satisfy your curiosity the man Appleweight will be produced there for your observation and identification.

I have the honor, sir, to remain with high regard and admiration, your obliged and obedient servant,
THOMAS ARDMORE,
Acting Governor of North Carolina.

The messenger departed, but recrossed the Raccoon shortly with a formal note agreeing to an armistice until after the meeting proposed at Ardsley.

"Col. Daubenspeck, you may withdraw your men and go into camp until further orders," said Jerry, and the notes of the bugle singing the recall rose sweetly upon the air.

"By George," said Ardmore, as he and Jerry rode away, "we'll throw it into old Grissy in a way that will jar the professor. But when it comes to the exchange of prisoners, I must tell the boys to bring up that chap I locked in the corn-crib. I had clean forgotten him."

American Illustrators.

The American illustrations—the illustrations of our numerous "best sellers" and other stories of shorter length—have noticeably improved in quality in the last few years. The illustrator has slowly but surely forged ahead of his old class and the average work is much higher than formerly. The illustrator is learning that his illustrations have not always illustrated either in their adherence to the printed text or in method of technique used in portraying his conception. He is learning that an illustration of any real value must not only illustrate, but that his work must have artistic value. With neither of these necessary features, it is, of course, worthless to the public, and if it be merely an accurate illustration, merely a line or brush description of a scene or single thing, the educated public wants simplicity of execution and as great a directness as is possible, and in many cases if the illustrator cares not for artistic value he should give way to the mechanical draftsman and photographer.

An Island of Sulphur.

In the Bay of Plenty, New Zealand, is one of the most extraordinary islands in the world. It is called White island, and consists mainly of sulphur mixed with gypsum and a few other minerals. Over the island, which is about three miles in circumference, and rises between 800 and 900 feet above the sea, floats continually an immense cloud of vapor attaining an elevation of 10,000 feet. In the center is a boiling lake of acid-charged water, covering fifty acres, and surrounded with blow-holes from which steam and sulphurous fumes are emitted with great force and noise. With care a boat can be navigated on the lake. The sulphur from White Island is very pure, but little effort has yet been made to procure it systematically.

Proud of Clubhouse.

The Woman's club of Lynn, Mass., does not put on any airs of exclusiveness, but has become a home for women in the best sense of the word. While there are splendid reception rooms and a large banquet room in the building, besides many rooms for the clubs to hold their meetings in, there are also two floors that are let for business purposes. Already a millinery shop and an art store have been established in the building. The cost of the building was only $50,000, and whist parties, fairs and other means of making money were resorted to.

LEG A MASS OF HUMOR

"About seven years ago a small abrasion appeared on my right leg just above my ankle. It irritated me so that I began to scratch it, and it began to spread until my leg from my ankle to the knee was one solid scale like a scab. The irritation was always worse at night and would not allow me to sleep, or my wife either, and it was completely undermining our health. I lost fifty pounds in weight and was almost out of my mind with pain and chagrin as no matter where the irritation came, at work, on the street or in the presence of company, I would have to scratch it until I had the blood running down into my shoe. I simply cannot describe my suffering during those seven years. The pain, mortification, loss of sleep, both to myself and wife is simply indescribable on paper and one has to experience it to know what it is.

"I tried all kinds of doctors and remedies but I might as well have thrown my money down a sewer. They would dry up for a little while and fill me with hope only to break out again just as bad if not worse. I had given up hope of ever being cured when I was induced by my wife to give the Cuticura Remedies a trial. After taking the Cuticura Remedies for a little while I began to see a change, and after taking a dozen bottles of Cuticura Resolvent in conjunction with the Cuticura Soap and Cuticura Ointment, the trouble had entirely disappeared and my leg was as fine as the day I was born. Now after a lapse of six months with no signs of a recurrence I feel perfectly safe in extending to you my heartfelt thanks for the good the Cuticura Remedies have done for me. I shall always recommend them to my friends. W. H. White, 312 E. Cabot St., Philadelphia, Pa., Feb. 4 and Apr. 13, 1909."

ABOUT THE LIMIT.

Jim—Gruet is terribly absent-minded.

Jack—I should say so! I've known him to telephone to his office and ask if he was in.

Included Her.

"Why did she get angry at the stranger in town?"

"She asked him if he had seen her daughter and he answered that he had seen all the sights of the place."

The barn owned by Jas. Cloon on the lots purchased from H. D. Kepner burned Saturday night. It is not known how the fire started, the evening was very quiet and no other damage was done. The building was insured.

Dr. and Mrs. Adams, Milton Parker and sister and cousin, Miss Whittemore, drove through in their automobile from Waterville, Kansas, on their way to Clear Lake. They stopped for a short time at the McNulty home in our city.

Dysentery is a dangerous disease but can be cured. Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhoea Remedy has been successfully used in nine epidemics of dysentery. It has never been known to fail. It is equally valuable for children and adults, and when reduced with water and sweetened, it is pleasant to take. Sold by all dealers.

KANAWHA

From the Record:

Oscar and Fred Oxley are putting up new machine sheds.

The sugar beets planted in this vicinity have done well.

Axel Johnson is building an addition to his farm house.

Thirteen farmers in the neighborhood of the lakes have bought a new Avery threshing outfit, $1600.

So far as we can learn the average yield of oats will be nearly 40 bushels an acre, with quality very good.

Mrs. Henry Hoeck is in some better health at the present time; she has been threatened with tuberculosis.

Miss Rieper from Lyons, Iowa, has been engaged as assistant principal of the Kanawha public school, which completes the corps of teachers.

M. R. Dixon writes to his brother Shep. that the small grain crop is good in southwestern North Dakota. Raleigh is with a lumber company and at present is across the Montana line helping to establish a new yard.

Ole Fosen has received a letter from his son Knut who is on a ranch near Teton in the northwestern part of Montana. Knut sends greetings to his friends and doesn't seem to be homesick yet. They have had a dry summer there and small grain did not develop; hay $25 a ton and very little of it. Oats sells for $2.00 a hundred pounds. The new homesteaders are working out at various occupations in the neighboring towns and on ranches.

In buying a cough medicine, don't be afraid to get Chamberlain's Cough Remedy. There is no danger from it, and relief is sure to follow. Especially recommended for coughs, colds and whooping cough. Sold by all dealers.

HER LOSS A GAIN

By GEORGE WEYMOUTH

It was against the rule of the house, and contrary to business ethics, Marcia knew that. But what are you going to do? Even when a girl becomes a part of the great business machine, she is not a piece of machinery.

Of course he didn't mean anything by it. Every three months he came breezing in from his western trip, full of enthusiasm and glad to see everybody in the firm. If he held Marcia's hand with a lingering pressure and looked at her until she blushed, it was only his way. If he gave her a flower and leaned a minute over her desk, saying commonplaces with his tongue and wonderful and mysteriously eloquent things with his eyes—why, it meant nothing. It was only the way of him.

But poor Marcia, part of the machine and yet not a piece of machinery, treasured the flower, remembered the pressure of the hand, and interpreted the message of the eloquent eyes in her dreams.

Which was against the rules of the house and contrary to all the sound ethics of business.

Then there came the day of the awful explosion. He had just come in from the road and there was trouble about his expense account.

"We can't stand for it, Mr. Jerome," said the head, angrily.

And because Jerome was young and foolish and didn't know how important the head was, and perhaps also because he traveled much in the west where men are free, there was a flippant reply that grated on the awful dignity of the big man of business, and the first thing Marcia knew there was a beautiful row on hand.

The head proposed to kick the salesman out of the office, and the salesman landed his resignation with a stiff uppercut on the adamantine cheek of the sacred head.

Many men came running to the help of the mighty one, but the salesman strode out with quivering nostrils and glaring eyes, and no man dared to lay a hand upon him.

He looked about the office defiantly, and then when his eyes fell upon Marcia they softened. He came and leaned over her desk.

"Well, little girl," he said, "I've left the firm. I won't see you any more, will I?"

"I'm sorry—that you've left the firm," murmured Marcia.

"You're the only thing in the firm that I hate to leave, little girl—and I guess the town's not so big but I'll find you again."

And he said other things, putting into words the tender messages that his eyes only had spoken until now.

And Marcia blushed and trembled, and could say nothing, though perhaps the one little look she gave him was not without its meaning.

All of which was a flagrant violation of the rules of the house, and against the Medean laws of sound business. But Marcia was too dazed and happy to care. Really, she was glad that she wasn't a piece of machinery on this great day, but just a girl with a heart and a soul.

It might have been 4 o'clock that afternoon when the boy came with a package for Marcia. Without thinking, she opened it—a dozen long stemmed American beauties, and on the card that nestled among the blossoms she read: "James Fleming Jerome, with the Consolidated company."

Now, the Consolidated was the hated rival of Marcia's company. But she did not think of that. She just rejoiced in her heart because Mr. Jerome had found another position so soon.

Before Marcia could hide the flowers and the card she knew that some one was looking over her shoulder, and she dared not turn back to see who it was. But some instinct told her it was the head himself.

A moment later, when he moved around in front of her, she knew that it really was the head, and that his eyes were cold with anger and the bruised place on his cheek, where the resignation had landed, stood out pitifully prominent.

"You will send those flowers back," said he, witheringly, "and you will write that no employee of this house receives any gifts from ruffians."

"Indeed, I will not," said Marcia. She was so indignant that she forgot to be afraid of the head.

"Then you will go to the cashier and get your week's pay—this minute," he snapped. "And you need not refer to us when you want another position."

When Marcia found herself on the street with her week's salary in one hand and the roses in the other hand, she still was too indignant to be sorry that she had lost her job.

She was walking along one of the principal streets when she ran into Mr. Jerome. In spite of her efforts to be brave there were tears in her eyes before she had finished telling him what had happened. After all, she just was a girl—and not a piece of machinery.

"Never mind, little girl, never mind," he said, tenderly. "I've got the Chicago territory with the Consolidated, and my salary is 40 per cent. more than it was. We'll be married tomorrow, or the next day—the first minute you're ready. And I think that the best thing that ever happened was when we both got discharged without a recommendation—don't you think so?"

"Yes," said Marcia.

HINTS FOR THE HOUSEWIFE

Best Way to Prepare Waffles—Keeping Cakes and Cookies—When Cooking Rice.

Waffles are much lighter if made with sour cream and the batter kept rather thin. To eat with them try chicken gravy or cinnamon and sugar mixed, or lumps of maple sugar melted down and served hot.

A woman who always has delicious little cakes and cookies on hand keeps a cut lemon or orange in the jar with them to give a "far away" and delightful flavor.

One cook always puts a very little lemon juice in the water in which she boils the rice. She claims that it keeps the rice white and the grains whole and separate. It may be worth trying.

If there are not peaches enough left from an opened can to go around mix them with orange pulp and a little sliced banana and the family will find them improved.

Peanut Butter.

This is not expensive to buy, but is still cheaper when made at home. Peanuts are an excellent substitute for meat, containing as they do 50 per cent. of albumen and 20 per cent. of fat. In the German army the soldiers are served regularly with bread and porridge made largely from the peanut. Peanuts are recommended now as a remedy for indigestion, whether eaten raw or made into a soup, sandwich or salad. For the peanut butter, run the shelled and blanched nuts through the meat grinder, using the finest knives. Add salt to flavor and rub into a creamy paste. As the nut is naturally oily, no other oil is needed, though some housewives prefer to add a little cream or olive oil to the well ground nuts. A spoonful of this peanut butter, added to potato or celery cream soup, imparts a delightful flavor.

Creamed Cod in Potato Case.

Boil and mash six good-sized potatoes, add one egg, a gill of milk, salt and pepper to taste and beat until light. Pick and scald a pound of salt cod, drain and scald again. Now press fish until dry. Put a large tablespoonful of butter in a frying pan and add two tablespoonfuls of flour. Mix and add a pint of milk. Stir till it thickens and add pepper to taste. Grease a pudding mold and line bottom and sides with the potato. Add the cod to the cream and fill the center. Cover the top with potato and bake a nice brown.

Vegetarian Beet Dish.

Wash two beets and boil for one hour or till tender. Remove the skin and cut them in thin slices. Peel a medium sized onion, cut it in very thin slices and divide the slices into rings.

Melt one heaping tablespoonful of butter, fry the onion in it till cooked, add salt, pepper and paprika to taste, a few drops of vinegar, also the slices of beets.

Allow the latter to become hot. Put a border of hot mashed potatoes on a hot platter and serve the beets in the center. Serve very hot.

Imitation Planked Fish.

A fair imitation of planked fish may be made on a platter. Put the baked or broiled fish in the center of the dish and rim it with seasoned hot mashed potatoes dropped around by the tablespoonful in egg shaped portions, alternating with wedges of lemon and sprigs of parsley. A broiled steak on a platter may also imitate the chef's elaborate plank work. Rim the platter with hot seasoned mashed potatoes, slices of beets, little white boiled onions and fried mushrooms.

Stewed Celery.

Use the left-over celery for the next day's luncheon by stewing it tender, mixing it with a white sauce and turning it over toast. The water in which the celery boils should be mixed with cream for the sauce. Or the water may be used to dip the toast in before the sauce is turned over it.

Dr. Zinn showed the writer a photograph yesterday which he had just received and it is a very interesting group. It consists of three brothers and their one sister, and the doctor's father is one of the group. The youngest is aged 78 years, the next older is 80, the next 82 and the eldest 87. These are all the children born in the family and they are all living. The father died at the age of 88 and the mother at 85. POSTMASTERS MEET

Big Attendance of Third and Fourth Class Nasbies Expected

AT DES MOINES, AUG. 30 AND 31

Postal Inspectors Declare That State's Postmasters Have Made Great Gains in Efficiency Since Formation of League.

Des Moines, Aug. 13.—Postmasters of Iowa of the third and fourth classes will hold their seventh annual convention in Des Moines at the new postoffice building Aug. 30 and 31. An official call for the meeting of the Iowa State League of Postmasters has been issued to the members by Charles O. Barry of Walker, president, and L. L. Reynolds of Little Sioux, secretary.

A large attendance is expected, as the dates of the convention have been arranged so that the postmasters may have the opportunity of visiting the Iowa state fair at the same time. They will be able, too, to take advantage of the special one and one-half fare offered for fair week by all the railroads of the state.

The league credits itself with the increasing efficiency of the Iowa postmasters. Postal inspectors have told members of the league that Iowa postmasters have made the greatest advance in efficiency during the last four years that has been made in the history of the service. The Iowa league is known as the largest and most thoroughly organized league in the country.

Following is the program for the convention:

Many Babies Lose Lives.

An alarming death rate for babies under one year of age has been established in Iowa during the past three months, according to Dr. Sumner, secretary of the Iowa state board of health. He states that about 33 per cent of the babies born during that period had died. He states also that during the month of July thirty-one babies had died in Des Moines alone as the result of cholera infantum. This disease is caused in many instances, he said, by impure milk.

Huge Picnic Labor Day.

A new form of celebrating Labor day, which occurs on Sept. 5 this year, has been planned by the members of the Trades assembly. In addition to the time honored labor parade in the morning there will be a monster picnic in the afternoon, to be held at the White City.

Nurse Is Promoted.

Miss Veronica Stapleton, graduate nurse from the Mercy hospital, has been appointed superintendent of nurses at St. Anthony's hospital, Rock Island.

COMPARATIVE CROP STATEMENT

Small Grains Abundant—Corn Condition Same as Aug. 1, 1909.

Des Moines, Aug. 13—Estimated condition of crops Aug. 1 follow:

	1910.	1909.	Last Ten Years
Corn	90.5	91	86.5
Wheat	102	*92	87
Oats	101	92	85
Barley	99	87	88
Flax	88	93	88
Hay	70	101.5	93
Pastures	59	102	92
Potatoes	63	92	97
Apples	4	65	57
Grapes	28	80	82

*Winter; Spring.

Iowa corn is in the same condition now that it was a year ago. A careful summarizing of the reports received from all the counties in the state by Dr. George M. Chappel, section crop director, indicates that the stand gives promise of a yield of 90.5 per cent of the average. This is 4 per cent better than the average at Aug. 1 for the last ten years.

If weather conditions are normal for the next few weeks, a harvest much larger than last year's is expected. Last year's crop was a good one, but weather conditions made it impossible for farmers to get into the fields and harvest it. Rains during September and October and snow in November kept corn in many fields until spring.

Spring wheat, oats and barley are in better condition than they have been for years. Crops which will be 10 per cent better than the average of the state for the last ten years are expected. Wheat and oats crops are expected to be better than the general average of the state for the last twenty years.

Hay, pastures, potatoes, apples and grapes fall way below last year's averages and the averages for the last ten years. Seventy per cent of the average crop of hay is expected as compared with 101.5 per cent, the average for Aug. 1 last year. There is only about one-half the pasturage there was last year and less than two-thirds as many potatoes. The apple crop was short last year. Indications are that there will be no crop this year, due to the late frost of the spring. Grapes are far below the average.

Victorious Team Home With Prizes.

When the victorious fire team returned to Des Moines after winning the world's and state championship at Red Oak, they brought with them Timothy, the prize chantecleer which goes with first money in the world's championship race. Timothy will now roost at No. 3 fire station and will rouse the boys of the house at 3 o'clock each morning whether they like it or not.

Besides Timothy the firemen brought back $625 in prize money which they won in the various races. The money will be distributed among the men who contributed to the expenses of the campaign for the world's championship.

It is freely predicted that the next state tournament will be held at Des Moines, although Sioux City is working hard for the honor. The decision on the next meeting place will be made at the annual convention of the firement, which will be held on the third Wednesday in November.

Governor Carroll Asks Speedy Trial.

Des Moines.—Governor B. F. Carroll, through his attorneys, Wednesday made a formal request for a speedy trial on the charge of criminal libel brought against him in an indictment by the Polk county grand jury in connection with the resignation of John Cownie as chairman of the state board of control.

The September term of court commences September 12. The trial jury is ordered to report September 19, a week later. In the motion filed the governor asks that the trial jury be ordered to report a week earlier and that the trial of the state of Iowa vs B. F. Carroll be assigned for the first case of the September term.

The motion is signed by Attorneys Guernsey, Parker & Miller, M. H. Cohen and J. M. Parsons. These attorneys will defend the governor when he is placed on trial.

Board of Health Sells Anti-toxin.

The state board of health has sent out its first consignment of anti-toxin for the treatment of diptheria since the board members obligated themselves to furnish it to the public at cost. It was sent to Dr. A. P. Hanchette at Council Bluffs, a member of the state board. The cost is about one-third the retail cost.

It is the hope of the state board to secure the passage of a law at the next legislature which will empower the board to furnish and distribute anti-toxin free of charge. The action of the members in furnishing it to the public at cost was the first step in this direction.

TOO MUCH ECONOMY

GOOD HABIT CAN BE CARRIED TO EXTREMES.

Housewife Will Do Well to Guard Against Penuriousness, In Which There Can Be No Possible Saving.

The housewife who is so conscientiously and rigidly economical that she is always bounded and surrounded by reversible silk skirts that should be thrown in the rag bag, or frazzled centerpieces that could be cut up into doilies, or lawn scraps that might be turned into handkerchiefs, should take a whole day off and learn that "every excess is a defect" and "extremes weaken."

Sometimes such painful and tedious ecomonies are necessary. Often they are not. Once in a while they are ridiculous. At times it happens that they even cause misery. Perhaps you remember with what pangs of wounded pride you went to school in the metamorphosed dress of your elder sister. Perhaps you read about the girl who came back from boarding school and straightway rejected her young country lover because his economical mother had put tucks in his trousers to provide against his rapid growth. Anyhow, there are two kinds of economies and the kind that will monopolize your time from sunrise to moonrise and keep you humping forward threading needles or flashing crochet hooks, and maybe make somebody sour at that, especially when that willing old second-hand man offers to relieve you of all the non-essential dry goods, woodware and ironware for cash, it is for you to watch out that the goblins of regret and disgust don't get you.

Foolish Habit to Acquire.

Unless it is a case of "have to" the tendency always to create something new out of something old is not so commendable in modern housekeeping as some might think, and for the following reasons:

In the first place most of us claim that modern dry goods has not the durability it was known to have 50 years ago. Therefore it doesn't always pay to make over something old, since much of the wear is gone. Then there is always some doubt as to the fit or presentability of a made-over thing, and the market for all kinds of discards, including furniture as well as clothes, being always open, it is generally easy to dispose of things that are in the way.

Besides, the housewife who wishes to be classed as "up to date" must grant herself sufficient leisure to neutralize the domestic strain with social or intellectual felicities, so a few of those laborious economies must be cut out.

Here are some samples of erring economies that increase the burden of daily housework: A mother with four children and an excellent income unraveled a knitted sweater that was a little tattered on one shoulder and sagged on one side and crocheted two pairs of house slippers of the ravelings.

This used up all of her afternoon leisure for two weeks. By darning carefully and stretching this sweater a little, which would have taken her only a few minutes, she could easily have disposed of it.

Washing Crepe de Chine.

Washing crepe de chine is no more difficult than to wash a frock of colored muslin. If tepid water and good soap are used with care it will come from the laundry as triumphantly as a piece of white linen. Do not let it lie in the water longer than is absolutely necessary, rinse thoroughly, and when half dry press on the wrong side with a medium hot iron. If of a delicate color the garment must be dried in a shady place after pressing.

For Young Housekeepers.

An acceptable engagement present for the girl who expects to go to housekeeping in a small apartment is a set of cook books in a small rack the size to stand in the pantry. Stand, books and all are not more than six inches square, yet contain a number of valuable recipes.

The little books are attractively bound in red or green leather, with gilt edges, and the titles lettered on the back. There is a book on cocktails, a book on odd dishes, on sandwiches and on the chafing dish.

Cleaning and Bleaching Hats.

The following mixture is recommended for cleaning and bleaching straw hats. It can be used on expensive Panama straws without injuring the material: Sodium bisulphate, five drams; tartaric acid, one dram; borax, five drams. Moisten a small quantity of the powder and apply it with a tooth brush to the hat. First remove the band.

Odors in Refrigerator.

Burn a paper in the refrigerator and it will remove all odors.

LADDER THAT WILL COLLAPSE

As Arranged by Illinois Man Steps Fold Up and Permit Sides to Be Drawn Together.

There are several forms of collapsible ladders, but that shown in the illustration seems to be the most ingenious yet. It was invented by an Illinois man. The sides of the ladder, Ladder Will Collapse.

or the stiles, have recesses along their inner edges in which the steps fit and into which they can be folded. The steps themselves are hinged in the center with the form of hinge that opens only one way. When the ladder is in use and the steps are flattened out they are quite as safe as if they were of a solid piece. When the stiles are pressed together the steps break and fold into two parts, each part fitting into the recess along the side of the stiles and giving the ladder the appearance of a couple of planks laid side by side. The back supports of this ladder and the side pieces connecting them with the stiles are also jointed and can be folded into a very small compass. Though this apparatus is perfectly safe it takes up no more room when collapsed than a four-inch plank of the same length.

enough mosquitoes to infest a whole neighborhood or the entire farm. That malaria is caused by a certain type of mosquito has been proved beyond a doubt; without the pests no such sickness would exist.

Hornless Cows.

Most dairymen prefer their cows without horns. A little stick of caustic rubbed on the horn button when the calf is a week old stops horn growth and does away with the disagreeable task of dehorning.

Cucumbers for pickles should be picked every alternate day at least. Cut them but never pull them off, as the vines are liable to be injured.

Why do so few farmers raise asparagus for family use? It is very little trouble; once planted it remains indefinitely and never fails to bring a crop.

Machinery used during the summer harvest should not be allowed to stand out in the fields. If it has not yet been placed under cover it is high time that it is placed there now.

One may have green corn until frost comes if care is taken to plant varieties which come to the eating stage at different times, or early sorts may be planted every ten days until August.

Neatness in the Garden.

Too much stress cannot be laid upon neatness in the garden. If faded flowers and fallen leaves are allowed to accumulate the charm that should characterize it is gone, and no amount of bloom can make up for the lack of care which is thus made manifest.

Had Lost Faith In Doctors and Medicines

"I wish to thank you for the sample of Resinol Soap sent me several weeks ago," writes Mrs. M. F. Clemmer, Sunbury, Pa. "At that time my baby's face was like a raw and bleeding piece of meat. Medicine from three different physicians, besides various salves recommended by friends, all seemed to make the Eczema worse. Then another mother recommended Resinol Ointment which I procured at once, although I had no more faith in it than in the rest I had tried; but never did I spend fifty cents to better advantage. The first and second days I noticed a remarkable change, and now at the end of the third week, my pretty blue-eyed, rosy-cheeked baby is perfectly well again. I think the cure was surely something remarkable. Resinol Ointment and Soap did in three weeks what everything else failed to do in four months. My baby had been positively disfigured, now his complexion is all right again."

Resinol Ointment cures all skin troubles, from pimples to the most disfiguring eruptions and rashes. The first application stops the intense itching of Eczema, Itching Piles, Pruritus, etc., and subdues the pain of a burn or scald instantaneously. It is sold in every leading drug store in the world.

Advice.

"Doctor," cried little Bingle, over his telephone, "my wife has lost her voice. What the dickens shall I do?"

"Why," said the doctor, gravely, "if I were you I'd remember the fact when Thanksgiving day comes around, and act accordingly."

Whereupon the doctor chuckled as he charged Bingle two dollars for professional services.—Harper's Weekly.

TEN YEARS OF SUFFERING.

Restored at Last to Perfect Health by Doan's Kidney Pills.

Mrs. Narcissa Waggoner, Carterville, Ill., says: "For over ten years I suffered terribly with backaches, headaches, nervous and dizzy spells. The kidney secretions were unnatural and gave me great trouble. One day I suddenly fell to the floor, where I lay for a long time unconscious. Three doctors who treated me diagnosed my case as paralysis and said they could do nothing more for me. As a last resort, I began using Doan's Kidney Pills and was permanently cured. I am stronger than before in years."

A New Version.

Lawyers have a peculiar system of abbreviation, such words as trustees, executors being cut down to trees, exors, and admors. This practise led to an amusing slip on the part of a solicitor who, somewhat late in life, abandoned his profession and entered the church. A few Sundays after his ordination he startled his congregation while reading the lesson by delivering one of the passages as follows: "I see men as trustees walking."

Shorty M'Cabe

Have you made the acquaintance of the latest hit in American humor—S well Ford's "Shorty McCabe" stories? If not you are missing a heap of fun. Shorty is a "character" in every sense of the word. As an artist in humorous slang he can match George Ade's fables, and as a creator of original and witty phrases he can match Mr. Dooley, but Shorty can beat all his predecessors in the art of telling a good story. It is a genuine story every time, too, with a hilariously funny plot and with characters that are alive and kicking, full of the quirks and absurdities of universal human nature.

Shorty McCabe, his better half, Sadie, and their laughable adventures in New York society can be found only in the Sunday Magazine of the Chicago Record-Herald, whose editor has the honor of having discovered Sewell Ford's power as a humorist. This unique magazine is filled with good fiction and timely articles every week, written by many of the most noted authors of our day, but nothing seems able to overshadow the perennial interest in the Shorty McCabe stories which appear every second week throughout the year. Wherever you go you will hear people talking and laughing over them. Thousands of people take the Sunday Record-Herald simply for its Sunday Magazine and the inimitable Shorty McCabe. It begins to be a question whether Shorty is not a more popular personage than Mr. Dooley.

Be sure and take a bottle of Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhoea Remedy with you when starting on your trip this summer. It cannot be obtained on board the trains or steamers. O. F. MISSMAN WITHDRAWS

Garner, Iowa, Aug. 22, 1910
Editor Times:

Will you kindly allow me space to say a few words in relation to my withdrawal from the nomination to the County Attorneyship of this County?

I have filed my withdrawal request for the reason that after the Primary Election last June, an opportunity was presented to me in the line of my profession, which to Mrs. Missman and myself seemed to offer a much more promising future than any political office to which I might attain, and which opportunity we believed would not again present itself.

We are mindful of the honor conferred upon us by the voters of the county, and to these and to the Press of the county which has treated us so kindly, we express our gratitude and thanks.

We remove from the county, but not from the great old state of Iowa, not even from this Judicial District, but wherever we go, now or in the future, the remembrance of Hancock County and her excellent people shall be the source of our greatest pleasure. O. F. MISSMAN.

KLEMME AMONG LEADERS

Tipton boasts of bank deposits amounting to $512 per capita making it richer than the wealthy city of Davenport. That is pretty good but Monticello can double the figures and then some. To be exact the per capita bank deposits of Monticello are $1,104, enough to buy an automobile for every man, woman, child and baby in the city, but we violate no confidence when we say that the deposits are not going to be spent for any such purpose.—Monticello Express.

While Klemme cannot quite come up to Monticello, we are right close up, and can beat Tipton to a frazzle. The per capita bank deposits of Klemme at the time of the last published bank statements, was $994.54.

SOME GOOD BALL GAMES

Forest City will hold a big base ball tournament on Tuesday, Wednesday, Thursday and Friday, August 30 and 31 and September 1 and 2. In all there will be eight teams competing and the purses hung up for the games are arranged in such a manner that both winners and losers get much larger returns than is usually the case in tournaments held in this section. The management will expend $1500 to insure the best that can be had. The teams entered are:

Omaha, Nebr.
Hartland, Minn.
Decorah
Mason City
Charles City
Clear Lake
Madrid
Humboldt

This list includes the best ball players that can be secured outside the leagues. The teams run right for the Klemme people who wish to attend and no doubt many from here will take advantage of the opportunity.

The "Free" American is the Land Owner

Capital and Labor may war, trusts may flourish and small dealers go to the wall, but the man who owns his land and draws his livlihood from the soil is independent. He doesn't need to worry.

There is no security on the market today as safe for the farmer to buy as good agricultural land.

Put your money in land. It is the safest investment known. You will then own and control your own investment; no dishonest or careless officer can lose your money; it cannot burn up; the broad acres won't run away.

Our farms are in the best agricultural section, where lands are steadily increasing in value.

We are owners and are continually purchasing large tracts of agricultural lands and always have on hand suitable farms for the actual settler or a suitable tract for the speculator. It is our effort to buy only such lands as are practical for actual farming. Our customers who purchased lands from us have uniformly and without exception made money. IOWA COAL OUTPUT

Production of Mines in 1910 Much Less Than in 1909

THE TOTAL IS 14,668,733 TONS

The Annual Report of State Mine Inspectors is Delivered to Governor Carroll—Rhys Recommends Changes in Law.

Des Moines, Aug. 20.—During the two years ending June 30, 1910, 18,000 coal miners employed in the state of Iowa mined over 14,000,000 tons of coal; or, to be exact, 14,568,733 tons.

These facts are shown by the biennial report of the state mining board, completed and delivered to Governor Carroll.

The report shows the amount of coal mined respectively in 1909 and 1910. In the number of tons, the output this year has been considerably less than in 1909. This is due, however to the fact that the mines were closed down for over a month this year while the wage controversy was being settled.

The biennial report also shows that in 1909, 18,002 men were employed in the mines of Iowa, that there were but twenty-eight fatal accidents and 121 non-fatal accidents. In 1910 the same number of men were employed, there were but thirty-nine fatal accidents, and ninety-five non-fatal accidents.

Rhys T. Rhys of Ottumwa, inspector of mines for the second district, comments on the accident feature of the report in his report to the state board. He says that there are no large accidents in Iowa, but that the men are picked off one by one, like soldiers in a skirmish.

This can be done away with to a great extent, too, he points out, by a few changes in the law requiring greater care in mining. He advocates the enactment of laws requiring daily inspection of the coal "face" in the mines where men are working.

Relative to the maintenance of escape ways in the Iowa mines where miners can escape in case of accident or fire in the mines, he states that two-thirds of the Iowa mines are in fine condition and the others are not bad. He recommends, however, that the state law be so changed that inspectors can determine how many escape ways each mine should have and how far the coal shafts can be dug away from escape ways.

He also suggests that there should be a law providing for compensation for workingmen injured in the mines.

Riggs Plans for Teachers' Meeting.

With an address by Col. Theodore Roosevelt as a feature, the fifty-sixth annual meeting of the Iowa State Teachers' association which will be held in Des Moines Nov. 3, 4 and 5, promises to be the largest in point of attendance of any in the history of the association. In the program for the session issued by John F. Riggs, state superintendent of public instruction, addresses by prominent educators of the country and an elaborate program of social events were announced.

Experts in special lines of teaching have been secured by the executive committee to give addresses and take charge of instruction work. The committee has already engaged Superintendent Bishop of Minneapolis, Prof. William A. Scott of Wisconsin, Miss Sweeny of Minneapolis and Mrs. Thomson and Mrs. Hefferan of Chicago to make addresses. Other prominent speakers who will give addresses are Prof. P. P. Claxton of Knoxville, Tenn.; Principal W. F. Webster of Minneapolis; County Superintendent O. J. Kern of Rockford, Ill.; Dr. Ira Bender, assistant superintendent of public schools, Buffalo, N. Y.; G. W. Conn, county superintendent, Woodstock, Ill.; Prof. Hill M. Bell of Des Moines; Hon. John F. Riggs; Prof. Arthur E. Bennett and Superintendent H. E. Blackmar.

Yeager Admits Violation of Law.

George Yeager in a formal answer filed with the city council denied all the charges made against him by the Iowa Anti-Saloon league by Superintendent Barber. He admitted that houses of prostitution had existed in the city contrary to the law and that liquor was sold in these houses, but declared that he had prosecuted all such places against which he could obtain any evidence. He denied having any knowledge of saloons being kept open after 10 o'clock or that he had given orders to his subordinates not to molest any houses of prostitution. Mr. Yeager also asserts that gambling had existed in the city contrary to law, but declared that he had prosecuted wherever he could obtain evidence.

DR. FROST MAKES REPORT.

Gives Views on Infantile Paralysis—Monkey Serum May be Cure.

Des Moines, Aug. 20.—"Public health must be protected by the segregation of infantile paralysis cases."

This simple plea embodied the sentiment of the 125 physicians assembled in the house of representatives to discuss the treatment, prevention and possible cure of the latest health peril in Iowa. It was made by Dr. T. U. McManus of Waterloo, a member of the state board of health. He stood supported by a cane, a living example of the terrible effects of the disease. He is permanently crippled and walks by the aid of a cane and a crutch.

The meeting was called by the state board of health to hear an informal report of Dr. Wade H. Frost, the government expert who has been investigating the epidemic at Mason City, and to discuss ways and means of preventing the spread of the disease.

President A. C. Moerke of the state board of health called the meeting to order. The report of Dr. Wade H. Frost was first given. Owing to the fact that he intends to continue his investigations for another week a full statement was not made by the government expert.

"Though in the last two weeks there have been only three cases reported at Mason City, I am not sure the maximum prevalency of the infantile paralysis epidemic has been reached," said Dr. Frost. "There are no two epidemics alike and from experiences in other states the maximum development has been reached in August or September." Dr. Frost told of the preventative measures taken at Mason City and enumerated the sanitary precautions prescribed.

Dr. Henry Albert, state bacteriologist from Iowa City, followed with the encouraging statement that experiments might result in a possible cure being found in serum from monkeys into which the germs of the disease had been inoculated. He said the outlook was reasonably hopeful. Dr. Albert stated that hydrogen peroxide would kill the virus and recommended its use by gargle or spray to those who had been exposed.

Following Dr. Albert came Dr. W. L. Bierring of Iowa City. He touched on the proven fact that infantile paralysis is transmissible. He emphasized the difficulty of diagnosing the disease.

"Rest is essential in the treatment of infantile paralysis," said Dr. Bierring. "When a victim recovers it is noticeable that the arms are better than the legs. This is accounted for by the fact that patients often walk too soon. There should certainly be no stimulating influence until the acute stage is passed."

New York Hippodrome at Coliseum.

It is anticipated that over 50,000 will be in attendance at the exhibitions of the New York Hippodrome which comes to Des Moines' monster Coliseum during eight days of the Iowa state fair. The dates will be August 28-Sept. 4, inclusive.

Among the features of the week's attraction will be Signor Lombardo, the noted orchestra leader, who comes to Des Moines with an orchestra of over eighty pieces and in addition carries an added feature of six operatic voices, the quality of whose tone is famous throughout eastern musical circles.

Mrs. Thos. Brooks Dies at San Diego.

Capt. Amos Brandt has received a letter from James F. Brooks of San Diego, telling that his mother, Mrs. Thomas A. Brooks, died August 10 at the home of her son. Her age was 86 years. Dr. Thomas A. Brooks and his wife came to Des Moines in September, 1845. He was the first postmaster. The first regular mail that came to Des Moines brought him his commission as postmaster.

Board Against Annexation.

The Des Moines school board is not in favor of the annexation of Valley Junction as a suburb. Because of the large school area of Des Moines and the enormous expense of maintaining so many scattered schools, the board feels that Des Moines is not financially able for some years to come to assume the added burden of the Valley Junction schools.

Dr. Rood's Will Is Filed.

The will of the late Dr. L. Drakely Rood was filed for probate in the district court with Probate Commissioner James E. O'Brien. Dr. Rood died in Des Moines on Aug. 8. By the will he leaves all his property to his wife, Bertha Rood, and appoints her administratrix of the will.

J. T. NACE ATTACKED

Claims He Was Victim of Vicious Knife Attack

WIDOWED NEICE BEING HELD

Mrs. Dowell Had Been Keeping House for Hamburg Man, and It Is Stated That They Had Quarreled Recently.

Hamburg, Ia., Aug. 22.—An attempt was made to murder J. T. Nace, a pioneer merchant, while he was sleeping in bed. Mrs. Dowell, a widowed niece, who has been keeping house for Nace, is accused and is being held for an investigation.

Nace, who was sleeping on a cot, was attacked with a knife and cut three times on the head and once on the hand. One thrust of the knife penetrated the left eye ball. The other cuts are thought not to be serious.

The affair occurred about 1:30 Saturday morning. After being attacked Nace jumped up and ran down stairs into the store room and out into the street. As he passed through the store room he picked up a couple of revolvers, and when he reached the street he fired four shots to arouse the neighbors and get help. Help came at once. Help came at once. Officers and surgeons were called by 'phone and the injured man attended to and taken to a hospital at Omaha on an early morning train.

The woman accused of the deed was with her year-old baby in a room adjoining the one occupied by Nace. She did not make her appearance until morning, and not knowing what to expect, the officers did not attempt to take her, but securely locked and guarded the house until morning. When she did appear she claimed to know nothing of what had happened.

Neighbors say Nace and the woman have quarreled several times of late, but because of the babe Nace would not turn her away with no place to go.

YEAGER WILL BE RE-INSTATED

Council Seems Agreed on That, But Form of Resolution Causes a Deadlock.

Des Moines, Aug. 22.—Although agreed from the moment the hearing on the charges against Police Chief George Yeager was concluded that the accused official should be reinstated, the four members of the council who were there when the investigation was finished spent nearly five hours on the language of the resolution that should reinstate him. As a result the members worked themselves into a hopeless deadlock of two to two. Ash being absent, and at 9:30 o'clock Saturday night adjournment was taken until 9 o'clock this morning.

TERRIBLE CASE OF GRAVEL

Baker City, Ore., Man Suffered 25 Years.

Charles Kurz, 1618 Center St., Baker City, Ore., says: "For 25 years I suffered agony from gravel. So intense was the pain when the stones were passing, that I had to lie on my back and brace my feet, often being forced to scream. On one occasion two stones became lodged and I could not pass the urine for two days. I spent hundreds of dollars without relief. At last I began taking Doan's Kidney Pills. They are the only remedy that wards off these attacks."

KEEP BABY'S SKIN CLEAR

Few parents realize how many estimable lives have been embittered and social and business success prevented by serious skin affections which so often result from the neglect of minor eruptions in infancy and childhood. With but a little care and the use of the proper emollients, baby's skin and hair may be preserved, purified and beautified, minor eruptions prevented from becoming chronic and torturing, disfiguring rashes, itchings, irritations and chafings dispelled.

To this end, nothing is so pure, so sweet, so speedily effective as the constant use of Cuticura Soap, assisted, when necessary, by Cuticura Ointment. Send to Potter Drug & Chem. The worst o' these here shepherds is, my boy, that they reg'larly turns the heads of all the young ladies about here. Lord bless their little hearts, they think it's all right, and don't know no better; but they're the wictims o' gammon, Samivel, they're the wictims o' gammon. Nothin' else, and wot aggragates me, Samivel, is to see 'em awastin' all their time and labor in making clothes for copper-colored people as don't want 'em and taking no notice of flesh-colored Christians as do. If I'd my way, Samivel, I'd just stick some o' these here lazy shepherds behind a heavy wheel-barrow, and run 'em up and down a 14-inch plank all day. That 'ud shake the nonsense out of 'em, if anythin' vould.—Mr. Weller, Quoted by Charles Dickens.

PARIS ET LES PARISIENNES

ORIGIN OF STYLES

AMERICANS TAKE THEIR IDEAS FROM PARIS.

Fashion Must Be Followed Even Though the Styles of Gowns and Millinery Cannot Be Made to Look Attractive.

BY FRANCES GROSVENOR.

All at once, from the quarters of the compass, comes an inquiry into the origin of the styles with which American women are blessed—or afflicted—in the fashioning of their clothes. It seems that our apparel, especially in the matter of millinery, has not only failed to please our men folks (who fain would worship at the shrine of beauty adorned), but has provoked a revolt on the part of many women during the past year.

The "Merry Widow" and the "Peach Basket" (alluring names for hats), called down the wrath of our male relatives, made us the sport of the caricaturist in the daily press, and even provoked a revolt on our part.

How did we come by such atrocious millinery? Mr. Boh tells us it was foisted on us by the French, in whom we have had such faith for so long a time. All this commotion served as advertising, and thousands of us went on our way—not serenely—getting in everybody's else way with our "merry widows," and resembling toadstools under our "peach baskets," defeating our own efforts to look attractive and meriting the settled conviction in many minds that women are hopelessly foolish when it comes to following the fashion.

Our conglomeration of models comes to us through many channels and "It is the style," or "They are wearing this" are bound to cease to be a big stick. We are destined to become more independent in our choice of styles and to wear millinery of which even our male kin will be compelled to admit "It is beautiful" and "It is suited to you." We will not care a fig about who is wearing it or whether somebody else made it the style or not. It will be in the trend of fashion, otherwise our menfolk would pronounce it too conspicuous, and everybody will be happy when everybody is suited.

DRESS DETAILS IMPORTANT

Attention to Little Things Will Raise the Hat or Gown Above Mediocrity.

In dress, as in other things, the importance of the attention to little things is essential. If this be done, the big effect will take care of itself. A gown, hat or wrap can be raised from a plane of mediocrity to that of distinction by the introduction of little details of ornamentation that are decidedly successful in the attainment of that end, yet are within the reach of most fingers.

A hat that in itself is the duplicate of hundreds of others can be treated to a peculiar binding or an unusual adjustment of ornaments. The binding, by the way, offers wide field for differentiation from the usual flat velvet facing. Fringe in silken or linen form is distinctive, if used as an edging for the turned-down rim. Silk or velvet can be puffed or shirred over the edge, while a rose quilling is the newest trimming for that part of the hat.

Then, again, color in the form of beads, silk or velvet can be used with a discreet eye for unusual combination of tones. In other words, the unusual but approved alliances of shades make for the distinctive. A detail perhaps that many women overlook is the question of hatpins. Just as soon as one considers these ornaments of utility (and dangers) to form a part of the hat scheme there will be added effect. Do not choose promiscuously the pins, each of which is very beautiful, but in the relation to others detracts from the whole. Surely, the immense discs should be made to contribute to the headgear.

In dress the details are extremely important. Little pleatings that are for the most part hidden, applications of tiny buttons or narrow braid, hidden bands of color under lace and the wonderful attention to hooks, loops and buttons at all fastenings are the factors that produce a successful whole.

Motifs not applied by the machine, but by hand, and buttonholed in such a way that the material melts into the edging are extremely effective. Pipings of two or three colors form tiny lines of contrast on unexpected places, while a piece of embroidery or chintz that many of us would consign to the scrap bag can be made important as a decorative agent.

Last of all, let there be paid a careful attention to the accessories with which woman adorns herself. With a red dress use the jewelry that best harmonizes with the shade. Black and white are more friendly to the jewel casket, but the rule of one color scheme is the best to be observed.

FOR THE SMALL GIRL

Sky blue zephyr is used for this simple little dress, which has a plastron front put on with a wrapped seam; the material which is set to this is pleated; a band draws the pleats in at the waist; the collar and cuffs are just stitched at the edge.

Hat of soft straw trimmed with ribbon.

Material required: 3½ yards 36 inches wide.

Handkerchief Case.

A novel handkerchief case consists of two squares, a little larger than a folded handkerchief, of cardboard, padded and covered outside with cretonne and inside with silk, with a buttonholed edge or a band of gilt galloon. The handkerchiefs go between these, and the case is held together by a circlet of silk rubber with a lace edging.

This case is very convenient for traveling, as it holds a number of handkerchiefs and does not take up the space of the ordinary handkerchief case.

Flower Friezes.

A pretty English idea lately come to America is the application of a frieze, consisting of a canvas or paper border of flowers with the background cut away with a sharp pair of embroidery scissors, to the white or green painted walls of a bungalow. The dado or ceiling border thus formed is very effective and may be applied to every room in the cottage with a differently tinted wall and a different choice of flowers appropriately distributed for each. Try it on your summer bungalow.

WELCOME WORDS TO WOMEN

Women who suffer with disorders peculiar to their sex should write to Dr. Pierce and receive free the advice of a physician of over 40 years' experience—a skilled and successful specialist in the diseases of women. Every letter of this sort has the most careful consideration and is regarded as sacredly confidential. Many sensitively modest women write fully to Dr. Pierce what they would shrink from telling to their local physician. The local physician is pretty sure to say that he cannot do anything without "an examination." Dr. Pierce holds that these distasteful examinations are generally needless, and that no woman, except in rare cases, should submit to them.

Dr. Pierce's treatment will cure you right in the privacy of your own home. His "Favorite Prescription" has cured hundreds of thousands, some of them the worst of cases.

It is the only medicine of its kind that is the product of a regularly graduated physician. The only one good enough that its makers dare to print its every ingredient on its outside wrapper. There's no secrecy. It will bear examination. No alcohol and no habit-forming drugs are found in it. Some unscrupulous medicine dealers may offer you a substitute. Don't take it. Don't trifle with your health. Write to World's Dispensary Medical Association, Dr. R. V. Pierce, President, Buffalo, N. Y.,—take the advice received and be well.

WESTERN CANADA'S 1910 CROPS

160 ACRE FARMS IN WESTERN CANADA FREE

Wheat Yield in Many Districts Will Be From 25 to 35 Bushels Per Acre

Land sales and homestead entries increasing. No cessation in numbers going from United States. Wonderful opportunities remain for those who intend making Canada their home. New districts being opened up for settlement. Many farmers will net, this year, $10 to $15 per acre from their wheat crop. All the advantages of old settled countries are there. Good schools, churches, splendid markets, excellent railway facilities. See the grain exhibit at the different State and some of the County fairs.

Letters similar to the following are received every day, testifying to satisfactory conditions; other districts are as favorably spoken of:

THEY SENT FOR THEIR SON.

Maidstone, Sask., Canada, Aug. 5th, 1910.
"My parents came here from Cedar Falls, Iowa, four years ago, and were so well pleased with this country they sent to Coeur d'Alene for me. I have taken up a homestead near them, and am perfectly satisfied to stop here." Leonard Douglas.

WANTS SETTLER'S RATE FOR HIS STOCK.

Stettler, Alberta, July 31st, 1910.
"Well I got up here from Forest City, Iowa, last Spring in good shape with the stock and everything. Now, I have got two boys back in Iowa yet, and I am going back there now soon to get them and another car up here this fall. What I would like to know is, if there is any chance to get a cheap rate back again, and when we return to Canada I will call at your office for our certificates."
Yours truly, H. A. Wik.

WILL MAKE HIS HOME IN CANADA.

Brainerd, Minn., Aug. 1st, 1910.
"I am going to Canada a week from today and intend to make my home there. My husband has been there six weeks and is well pleased with the country; so he wants me to come as soon as possible. He filed on a claim near Landis, Sask., and by his description of it it must be a pretty place. My brother-in-law, Mr. Frank J. Zimmer, lives there and it was through him that we decided to locate in Canada."
Yours truly,
Mrs. Richard Henry Ebinger.

Taylors Falls, Minn., Aug. 7, 1910.
"I shall go to Camrose this Fall with my cattle and household goods. I got a poor crop here this year and my brother-in-law, Axel Nordstrom in Camrose, wants me to come there. He formerly lived in Wilton, North Dakota. I am going to buy or take homestead when I get there, but I do not want to travel two times there, for I take my brother-in-law's word about the country, and want to get your low rate."
Yours truly
Peter A. Nelson.

WANTS TO RETURN TO CANADA.

Vesta, Minn., July 24th, 1910
"I went to Canada nine years ago and took up a quarter section of railroad land and a homestead, but my boys have never taken up any land yet. I still hold the railroad land. I had to come back to the states on account of my health. Please let me know at once if I can get the cheap rates to Ponoka, Alberta."
Yours truly,
Geo. Paskewitz.
Vesta, Minn.

SPECIAL RULES

Adopted by the State Board of Health Regarding Infantile Paralysis

All cases of Infantile Paralysis or suspected cases shall be reported by the attending physician or head of the family to the local board of health.

The state board of health recommends the quarantine of all cases for at least two weeks after the beginning of the disease and the thorough disinfection of infected premises after the termination of the disease.

Dysentery is a dangerous disease but can be cured. Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhoea Remedy has been successfully used in nine epidemics of dysentery. It has never been known to fail. BRITT

From the News:

L. E. Colwell and H. A. Covey have purchased the Britt bakery from W. E. Curtis.

Do not fail to keep in mind the dates of the Britt fair Sept. 20 to 23, and prepare something to help make it attractive.

Father Baxter was at home from Albert Lea Sunday. His mother is still seriously ill and her death would not be unexpected at any time.

Hancock county is the garden spot of Iowa for good crops and there is much inquiry for real estate in this vicinity, with prices going up steadily.

Mrs. Healy has received word that her son Frank, who was injured by an auto recently, is gaining nicely and left the hospital Monday.

Many from Britt were out to Eagle Lake last Sunday to see the new concrete abutments and spillway for the dam, which is being built by Wm. Vescelius.

In buying a cough medicine, don't be afraid to get Chamberlain's Cough Remedy. There is no danger from it, and relief is sure to follow. Especially recommended for coughs, colds and whooping cough. Sold by all dealers.

KANAWHA

From the Record:

Mrs. Carl Ersland has returned to Norge, Oklahoma, after a visit with friends and relatives here.

Dell Lobdell and wife are the parents of a new baby boy, weight 8 lbs., born Tuesday, August 16th.

There was a houseful of people at Kort Koskamp's home Tuesday evening. That being his 52nd birthday his children all gathered there and had a very pleasant meeting. They presented him with a very fine gold watch.

Rain and cloudy weather partially spoiled the annual carnival program Wednesday. The Goodell and Renwick base ball teams played a very interesting game in the afternoon, which Goodell won by a score of 6 to 5. The pillow fight was put on after the game and proved an amusing feature. George Brummund and Lawyer Ford divided first money and Harm Rieckens took second money. Herm Brummund captured the biggest money. The remainder of the program will be given today (Thursday.) The Sarver carnival company, which are giving good satisfaction, will continue their show until the end of this week.

Tuesday night H. L. Scott's house northwest of Kanawha was struck by lightning. The plastering, lath and weatherboards from the north end was considerably torn off and some scantlings broken. The people in the house were all abed and although one bed was covered with debris yet no one was injured. No fire resulted from the lightning.

Be sure and take a bottle of Chamberlain's Colic, Cholera and Diarrhoea Remedy with you when starting on your trip this summer. It cannot be obtained on board the trains or steamers. Changes of water and climate often cause sudden attacks of diarrhoea, and it is best to be prepared. Sold by all dealers.

GOT IN WITH BOTH FEET

And Next Time Brown Will Think Before He Talks Too Much.

"I see your wife is a German," remarked Brown casually.

Robinson looked up in surprise. "Why," he said, "how did you guess that? She was born in this country, and has neither a trace of accent or German idiom."

Brown laughed a little confusedly. "I just guessed it," he answered. "It was—well, maybe it was that I thought she had Teutonic features."

Robinson looked first at his wife and then at Brown. "That is curious," he said. "She is more often taken for a person of French extraction. Her people are from the Rhine district, you know, and as she is dark and slight very few would think she was German. In the popular mind that type is fair and large."

"Oh," answered Brown, who had by this time recovered his assurance, "I am well acquainted with many types of German. That is probably how I came to make such an inconsiderate remark."

Mrs. Robinson laughed lightly. "I'm proud of my Germanic origin," she said. "But it has never happened before that anyone guessed it so accurately as you did."

Then the conversation drifted to other matters. But Mrs. Brown remembered, and on the way home she said to her husband: "How did you guess Mrs. Robinson is German?"

"Nearly got my foot in it, didn't I?" said her husband, throwing out his chest a little. "But it was clever detective work on my part. Did you see how she poured tea? No? Well, she lifted the pot high and poured it so that bubbles formed in the cup. She got that gesture from pouring beer, or seeing it poured, so as to get a bead. That made me think she was German. Of course she might have been some other nationality, but the Germans take most care in pouring their beer and do it most artistically, so—"

But his wife interrupted him. "How does it happen," she demanded, "that you know so much about the art of pouring beer?" And though she continued to question him all the way home and for a considerable time after they arrived home, she did not get what she considered a satisfactory explanation.—N. Y. Press.

No Cause for Contest.

Assemblyman John C. Hackett of New York recently told this story in a speech: "I was up in Rockland county last summer and there was a banquet given at a country hotel. All the farmers were there and all the village characters. I was asked to make a speech. 'Now,' said I, with the usual apologetic manner, 'it is not fair to you for the toastmaster to ask me to speak. I am notorious as the worst public speaker in the state of New York. My reputation extends from one end of the state to the other. I have no rival whatever when it comes——' I was interrupted by a lanky, ill-clad individual, who had stuck too close to the beer pitcher. 'Gentlemen,' said he, 'I take 'ception to what this here man says. He ain't the worst public speaker in the state. I am. You all know it, an' I want it made a matter of record that I took 'ception.' 'Well, my friend,' said I, 'suppose we leave it to the guests. You sit down while I say my piece and then I'll sit down and let you give a demonstration.' The fellow agreed, and I went on. I hadn't gone far when he got up again. ''S all right,' said he, 'you win; needn't go no further.'"

Possibilities of Odd Moments.

It is really wonderful how much can be gained by improving odds and ends of time in keen analytical observing, thinking, reading, studying. Think of the untold wealth locked up in the spare moments and long winter evenings of every life, says Success Magazine. It is possible to pick up an education in the odds and ends of time which most people throw away.

If those who have been deprived of a college education would only make up their minds to get a substitute for it, they would be amazed to see what even the evenings of a few weeks devoted conscientiously to the college studies would accomplish.

When a noted literary man asked how he managed to accomplish so much with so little friction or apparent effort, he replied: "By organizing my time. To every hour its appointed task or duty, with no overlapping or infringements."

There is a great deal of time wasted even in the busiest lives, which, if properly organized, might be used to advantage.

Why They Parted.

A New York man who has paid arduous court to a charming young woman of athletic tendencies was lately encountered by a friend at one of the fashionable restaurants.

Instead of the usual intended he had with him his sister, whom he was entertaining with all the devotion that an ardent suitor might bestow upon his ideal.

"Where is your sweetheart?" asked the friend.

"Parted forever," said the late Romeo. "For keeps. In order to forget I am showing my hitherto neglected sister the time of her life."

"If you will pardon my curiosity—" began the friend.

"I will," interrupted the youth, with heartiness. "I will tell you all. One day this week I saw her run alongside a fast moving surface car in the street and jump on like a man. It is all off."

Politics in the Pyrenees.

"One day," said a Parisian, "I arrived with my wife at an inn in the lower Pyrenees. It was during an electoral campaign. The place pleased me. Two days passed. At the moment of my departure I asked for my account. The innkeeper responded: 'You owe nothing. The Count de V., who is the candidate, has paid everything in this district for 15 days.' So I remained at that inn 15 days without paying a sou."

A Form of Luck.

There is such a thing as luck. If you are a small eater and a slow eater you are lucky.—Atchison Globe.

No Longer a Friend.

"Who is that scrawny woman over there?"

"That is my wife."

"Oh; I beg your pardon, old fellow. I didn't dream—"

"Don't distress yourself. She's suing me for divorce now."—Birmingham Age-Herald.

This game was a disappointment as the Clear Lake bunch was outclassed. The best game was on Thursday afternoon when Clear Lake defeated Mason City by a score of 3 to 2.

The coal situation is liable to be worse this winter than last. You can only be on the safe side by ordering your winter supply of coal NOW. I now have on hand the best grades of hard and soft coal and I am pricing it right. Buy your coal from me now and save money. "Just do you think," cried Mrs. son, glowing before Jerry and re on their return; "we have a guest!"

"In the coal cellar?" inquired her r.

"No, in the blue room adjoining Dangerfield's! And what do you It is none other than the ter of the governor of South a."

"Oh, Nellie!" gasped Ardmore.

Ardmore had rarely been so busy ring the afternoon. Several more paper correspondents were found ing about the estate, and they added to the howling mob in the ey cellars.

"It has all happened very handily ," said Collins; "we've got the t-priced newspaper talent in the right under our hands, and be- e turn them loose we'll dictate what history is to know of dark proceedings."

Few minutes before five the flag rth Carolina was hung from the eranda of the bungalow. At the tood an armed militiaman. Col. nspeck had been invited to be t, and he appeared accompanied eral other officers in full uni- form. Word of the meeting place had been sent through the lines to the enemy, and the messenger rode back with Griswold, who was followed quickly by the adjutant general of South Carolina and half a dozen other officers. The guard saluted as Griswold ran up the steps of the veranda, and at the door Ardmore met him and greeted him formally.

At the end of a long table Jerry Dangerfield sat with her arms folded. She wore, as befitting the occasion, a gray riding-dress and a gray felt hat perched a trifle to one side.

She bowed coldly to Griswold, whose hand, as he surveyed the room and glanced out at the flag that fluttered in the doorway, went to his mustache with that gesture that Ardmore so greatly disliked; but Griswold again bowed gravely to his adversaries.

"Miss Dangerfield, and gentlemen," began Griswold, with an air of addressing a supreme tribunal, "I believe this whole matter depends upon the arrest of one Appleweight, a well known outlaw of North Carolina—"

"I beg your pardon—"

It was Jerry who interrupted him, her little fists clenching, a glint of fire in her eyes.

"It is for me to ask your pardon, Miss Dangerfield! Let us agree that this person is an unworthy citizen of any state, and proceed. It has been your endeavor to see this man under arrest in South Carolina, thus relieving North Carolina or her chief executive of responsibility for him. We, on our side, have used every effort to lodge Appleweight in jail on your side of the state line. Am I correct?"

Jerry nodded affirmatively.

"Then, Miss Dangerfield, and gentlemen, I must tell you that you have lost your contention, for Appleweight spent last night in jail at Kildare, and to secure his safe retention there, we generously lent your state a few of our militia to guard him. The proceeding was a trifle irregular, we admit—the least bit ultra vires—but the peculiar situation seemed to justify us."

"There are not two Bill Appleweights," remarked Col. Daubenspeck. "I assure you that the real criminal spent last night in jail at Turner Court House, guarded by trustworthy men, and we are able to produce him."

"The quickest way to settle this point, Prof. Griswold, is by bringing in your man," remarked Ardmore icily.

"On the other hand"—and Griswold's tone was confident—"as there is no reason for doubt that we have the real Appleweight, and as we are on your territory and in a measure your guests, it is only fair that you produce the man you believe to be Appleweight, that we may have a look at him first."

"Certainly," said Jerry. "Our prisoner does not deny his identity. It gives us pleasure to produce him."

At a nod from Col. Daubenspeck the orderly at the door ran off to where Cooke and the prisoner waited.

In the interval there was a general exchange of introductions at the bungalow. The adjutant general of South Carolina was in a merry mood and began chaffing Ardmore upon the deadly character of apples found in his orchard beyond the Raccoon.

"I deeply regret," said Ardmore, rubbing his chin, "that the adjutant general of North Carolina is suffering from a severe attack of paralysis agitans and will be unable to meet with us."

"I deplore the fact," replied the adjutant general of South Carolina, "for one of our scouts picked up a darky in the highway a while ago who had on a uniform dress coat with the initials 'R. G.' sewed in the pocket."

"If you will return that garment to me, general," said Ardmore, "I will see that it reaches Col. Gillingwater by special messenger, where, upon his couch of pain, he chafes over his enforced absence from the field of danger."

Steps sounded on the veranda and all rose as Cooke appeared in the door, leading his handcuffed prisoner, who stood erect and glared at the company in gloomy silence.

"This man," said Ardmore, "we declare to be Bill Appleweight, alias Potect. I ask you, sir"—he addressed the prisoner—"to state whether you are not known by one or both of these names?"

The man nodded his head and grumbled a reluctant affirmative.

"Prof. Griswold," Ardmore went on, "the gentleman in charge of the prisoner is Roger Cooke, for many years in the secret service of the United States. He now conducts a private agency and is in my employ. Mr. Cooke, I will ask you whether you identify this man as Appleweight?"

"There is no doubt of it whatever. I have known him for years. I once arrested him for moonshining and he served a year in the penitentiary as the result of that arrest. You will pardon me, sir," Cooke continued, addressing Griswold directly, "but this is undoubtedly the man you had yourself captured at Mount Nebo church two nights ago, but who was taken from you, as you may not know, by Miss Geraldine Dangerfield. She was lost in the woods and came upon the captive much to her own surprise."

Griswold lifted his brows in amazement and turned toward Jerry.

"If that is the case, Miss Dangerfield, I salute you! I am sorry to confess, however, that I did not myself see the man who was captured by my friends at the church, owing, it appears, to Miss Dangerfield's prompt and daring action, and the regrettable cowardice of my men. I want to say to you, gentlemen, in all frankness, that I am greatly astonished at what you tell me. Our prisoner is about the same height as this man, has the same slight stoop in the shoulders, and the same short beard; but there the resemblance ends."

Ardmore was trying not to show too plainly his joy at Griswold's discomfiture. None of the South Carolina officers had ever seen Appleweight, as they lived remote from the scene of his exploits. Habersham's men, who had so signally failed in the descent upon Mount Nebo church, had taken to the woods on the appearance of the state soldiery along the border, and could not be found to identify the man seized at the house on the creek. Habersham had discreetly declined to support Griswold's venture at the last moment; to do so would, he pleaded, ruin his chances of political preferment in the future; or worse things might, indeed, happen if he countenanced and supported the armed invasion of North Carolina by South Carolina militia. The zealous young militiamen who had captured the stranger in the house on the creek had pronounced the man Appleweight, and their statement had been accepted and emphasized when the man was taken before Griswold, to whom he stubbornly refused to make any statement whatever.

"Now that you cannot deny that we have the real Appleweight," began Jerry, "who is, you must remember, a prisoner of the state of South Carolina, and must be returned to the Mingo county jail at once, I think we may as well look at your prisoner, Prof. Griswold. He may be one of Mr. Appleweight's associates in business; but as we are interested only in the chief culprit, the identity of the man you hold is of very little interest to us."

"If," said Griswold, "he is not Appleweight, the original blown in the bottle—"

"Jug, if you please!" interposed Ardmore very seriously.

"Then we don't care about him and I shall make you a present of him."

"Or," remarked Ardmore, "I might exchange him for a ruffian I captured myself down on the Raccoon. He seemed quite insane, declaring himself to be the governor of South Carolina and I locked him up in a corncrib for safe keeping."

(TO BE CONTINUED.)

THREE ACTORS IN SORROW

Showing How Easily Makers of Mirth May Be Involved in Personal Tragedy.

A pathetic story of the tragedies of the stage is revealed by David Beehler, who has just returned from Sioux City, Ia., where he encountered De Wolf Hopper and Arthur Dunn.

The trio were in the West hotel in Sioux City. It was their first meeting in years. After the exchange of courtesies had been passed Mr. Dunn asked Hopper, "How are your folks?" and received the reply, "Very well, thank you. How are yours?" "Immense,' replied Dunn.

Three days later Mr. Hopper received a wire announcing the death of his mother and was forced to cancel engagements. That same day, two hours later, Mr. Dunn received a telegraphic announcement of his father's death, and on the same night was informed that his brother-in-law, Ezra Kendall, had passed away. The men met on the outgoing train from Sioux City and condoled with each other over the bereavement which had befallen them.—Chicago American.

To Gain Social Success.

To be successful socially, a woman must possess brains and looks, a ready wit and perfect manners. She must be well posted on general topics and have a fund of what the English call "small talk." She can never rise to any prominence in the social world unless she has a firm will, sound sense and ready sympathies.

These qualities, added to enough of wealth to do as she would do, make the best and most representative type of the American society woman. But then, our women possess all these qualities even when their lives are not thrown in the most pleasant places. No woman in the world possesses the adaptability of the American woman. She always knows what to do and when to do it.

Those Post-Holiday Swaps.

A woman tripped into a Euclid avenue store that makes a specialty of china and cut glassware, with a baking dish under her arm. She received the article for Christmas, she said, but as she already had one, she desired to get the money on it. The clerk obligingly refunded the original price.

That night somebody in the office discovered that the present had been bought on credit. Now the firm is wondering where the profit will come in if any chance, the original buyer should fail to pay.—Cleveland Plain Dealer.

No Place for Him.

"It's a funny thing," said the tall man," but when we lived on the first floor of our apartment house we had one baby. Twins came when we moved to the second floor and—"

"That's enough," yelled the short man in wild excitement. "I'm going to vacate to-morrow. We've just moved on the fourth floor!"

Prizes For Good Menus

The patient housewife who is trying to cater to the needs of her family on a moderate income has to solve daily the same old problem. "What shall I cook for breakfast, for luncheon, for dinner?" The very monotony of the question gets on one's nerves, and there is a lot of real difficulty in planning a wholesome variety for each day. The Chicago Record-Herald has mercifully come to the aid of puzzled housewives by printing in each issue a set of three menus, with recipes, under the title "Meals for a Day." What is more it gives four cash prizes every week for the best of these menus, and women all over the country are invited to compete. The terms of award and the names of the latest winners may be found in any Monday issue of the Record-Herald. That is the day too, when the "Martha's Management" column appears, with its helpful hints and advice to cooks and housekeepers. Marion Harland's Sunday page also gives a group of selected recipes, which if cut out each week and kept in a scrap book will make a most valuable collection. Women not familiar with the prize menu feature of the Record-Herald should investigate it at once. Many have found it a handy means of getting fresh ideas and securing cash for those they already have.

CHILD KILLED AT KANAWHA

Fatal Accident in our Neighbor Town Last Week—Other Kanawha News.

From the Record:

The first great sorrow in the home of Mr. and Mrs. Ole T. Rikansrud was visited upon them Tuesday of this week when they were, without a moment's notice, called upon to part with their baby boy. The mother was washing and had some clothes hung on the line; the baby was out of sight of his mother a few minutes but in that time had become entangled in the clothes. A dress hanging down low in the form of a loop had caught the baby under the chin, and the little one's weight and motions to escape quickly wrapped the wet clothes around its neck, where it was found partly supported on its knees and by the dress. The sorrowful news was telephoned to town to the father, and in the hopes that life was not yet extinct, a physician was hastily driven to the scene, but life had departed.

M. N. Micheison has a patch of 14⅛ acres of wheat from which he secured about 500 bushels of wheat, or 34 bushels an acre. The ground has been in pasture several years before it was broken up for this crop.

Geo. Freerksen has sold his 160 acre farm, adjoining town on the south, to Elmer Engstrom. The price is $110 an acre, which is the top price paid for land in this vicinity.

Ham J. Warnock is moving to Waterloo, where he will continue his work in the line of painting and paper-hanging.

Jake Krauss and wife, living west of Kanawha, have a new baby boy, weight 8 lbs., arriving Saturday, August 20th.

He declared that the main issue in the fight in New York was not a specific reform measure, but bossism. Bossism, he declared, frequently led to corruption, and he promised to wage war on corrupt alliances between business and bosses.

More than a score of persons were injured, one probably fatally, at Chicago, crops in the surounding districts were destroyed, and damage which may amount to $1,000,000 was wrought in a storm which swept the city and suburbs. The wind at the height of the gale was of cyclonic proportions.

Upon her testimony of incompatibility, supported by the testimony of her maid, Elizabeth Johnson, Mrs. Edna Cowin Cudahy got a divorce from Jack Cudahy, son of the millionaire Chicago packer, at Kansas Ctiy. She was given alimony amounting to $1.

Representative Charles A. White, whose "confession" forms the basis of the charges of bribery against Minority Leader Lee O'Neil Browne of the general assembly, was under a grilling cross-examination by Attorney Forrest for the defense at Chicago. He contradicted much of the testimony which he gave at the first trial and made sworn statements which lay him open to perjury charges.

Killing frosts, the first of the season, were reported from the Yellowstone Park, Havre, Mont., Sheridan, Wyo., and other places in the northwest, doing much damage to corn, potatoes and other vegetables. Temperatures as low as 24 were reported.

Attorney W. T. Forrest made a motion to take the case of Lee O'Neil Browne, on trial at Chicago charged with bribery in the election of United States Senator Lorimer, from the jury and strike from the records the testimony of several of the state witnesses. This was the first step of the defense, as the prosecution closed its case. Judge Kersten refused both requests.

The Stylish Fisherman.

One of the guests at a fashionable summer resort in West Virginia got himself up in his best "fishing togs" and started along a certain mountain stream.

Meeting a native, he asked: "Here, my good man! Kindly tell me whether it would be worth my while to try fishing in this vicinity."

The native regarded him scornfully. "The fishin' ain't good," he finally said, "but I ain't informed as to how you values your time."—Lippincott's.

IN AGONY WITH ECZEMA

"No tongue can tell how I suffered for five years with itching and bleeding eczema, until I was cured by the Cuticura Remedies, and I am so grateful I want the world to know, for what helped me will help others. My body and face were covered with sores. One day it would seem to be better, and then break out again with the most terrible pain and itching. I have been sick several times, but never in my life did I experience such awful suffering as with this eczema. I had made up my mind that death was near at hand, and I longed for that time when I would be at rest. I had tried many different doctors and medicines without success, and my mother brought me the Cuticura Remedies, insisting that I try them. I began to feel better after the first bath with Cuticura Soap, and one application of Cuticura Ointment.

"I continued with the Cuticura Soap and Cuticura Ointment, and have taken four bottles of Cuticura Resolvent, and consider myself well. This was nine years ago and I have had no return of the trouble since. Any person having any doubt about this wonderful cure by the Cuticura Remedies can write to my address. $5,000,000 BRIDGE

Union Pacific Reported Planning New Bridge at Council Bluffs

PRESENT BRIDGE INADEQUATE

Proposed Structure Over Missouri River Would Be the Largest Bridge in the World—Over 300 Trains a Day.

Council Bluffs, Ia., Aug. 27.—To relieve congestion that at times is decidedly serious, the Union Pacific has under consideration plans for the reconstruction of its double track bridge over the Missouri river at this point, making it a four track bridge.

At intervals within the past three years, loud complaints have been lodged with the officials of the Union Pacific company by officials of other lines using the bridge, because of delays to their trains. The piece of track between the Union Pacific transfer in Council Bluffs and the Nebraska side of the river, where the two lines of track diverge towards the terminals of the various lines having trackage in Nebraska, is said to be one of the most seriously congested pieces of track in the country.

It was at first pointed out that lack of terminals in Omaha presented almost as serious a problem as the bridge trouble but since then additional tracks have been laid on ground recently secured and with the additional tracks at the two railway stations in Omaha the immediate need of increased trackage over the river is felt greater than ever.

The Rock Island, which has a long lease with the Union Pacific and which uses its tracks to South Omaha, is the most persistent and loudest kicker on present bridge facilities. At times its through passenger trains are laid out a half hour to an hour.

The proposed new four track bridge which will be the largest railroad bridge in the world, is to cost reports say, $5,000,000. The present structure was built in 1886. An average of more than 300 trains a day pass over it, and it is reported that the bridge shows signs of decay and rack from this tremendous traffic. Trains are sent over it at a speed estimated at 25 miles an hour.

In its day the present bridge was a wonder and achieved for its designers and builders great renown, because of the difficulties that had to be overcome in construction and because the steel structure was put in place without delaying traffic.

The bridge is used by every line of road entering Council Bluffs, with the exception of the Illinois Central, which has its own bridge, also a fine one. At times there are as many as ten trains upon the bridge and approaches.

Girl Plaintiff in Big Damage Suit.

Iowa City.—The biggest personal damage suit ever commenced against a railroad company in this county was started in the Johnson county district court with the filing of a petition by Miss Elma Johnson, who brings action against the Chicago, Rock Island & Pacific railway for $30,000 damages. She alleges in her petition that C. R. Alexander, a brakeman on the defendant road, threw from the train near Bloomfield, Ia., a torpedo with the intention that it should come into her possession and with a note attached to the torpedo. In handling the torpedo it exploded and as a result Miss Johnson lost one eye and is threatened with blindness in the other. She was also seriously damaged about the head and her face disfigured. The case will be tried at the September term of the district court.

ality he did nothing without my e approval. I am happy to say nothing has been neglected and reputation as a great statesman and friend of the people has not suffered at our hands. We arrested Mr. Appleweight, who is standing there by the fireplace, and landed him in the Mingo county jail as a joke on Gov. Osborne, and to appease the demands of the press and the Woman's Civic league of Raleigh. The copies of our correspondence on this and other matters will tell you the story more completely. And as for Gov. Osborne, I have taught him a lesson in the etiquette that should obtain between governors that he is not likely to forget. You will find that we have not hesitated to grant pardons, and we have filled, in one instance, the office of justice of the peace, made vacant by resignation. The key to your desk, papa, is behind the clock on the mantel in your private room."

"Ladies and gentlemen," began the governor of North Carolina, laying a hand upon the table, and with the other seizing the lapel of his rough, brown coat—a pose made familiar by all his photographs—"the jails of North Carolina are more uncomfortable than I had believed them to be, and I have taken a slight cold which compels me to be briefer than this interesting occasion demands. You have witnessed here an exhibition of filial devotion that has, I am sure, touched us all. It is well worth while for me to have suffered arrest and imprisonment to realize the depth of my daughter's love and the jealousy with which she has safeguarded my private and public honor."

He felt for a handkerchief and touched it gently to his eyes; but Collins declared afterward that Gov. Dangerfield was exactly like his daughter and that one never could be sure that his mirth was genuine.

"I was aware only yesterday, when I saw a newspaper for the first time in a week, that political capital was being made of my absence from Raleigh; and that my dear friend, the governor of South Carolina, also, was being called to account for flinching in the face of imperative duty."

"Your friend, governor?" cried Ardmore, unable to restrain himself.

"Certainly, Mr. Ardmore," continued Gov. Dangerfield. "That angry parting of ours at New Orleans was all for effect to get space in the newspapers. We had confided to each other that the cares of state had worn us to an intolerable point and that we must have rest. Brother Appleweight had, I confess, given us both a great deal of annoyance, and to be frank, neither Osborne nor I wished to take the initiative in his case. So we resolved to disappear, and go to some quiet place for rest. We outfitted with old clothes and came to the border. Gov. Osborne has a farm over there somewhere in Mingo county and we made it our headquarters; but in roaming about we came upon that charming shanty of yours, Mr. Ardmore, down on the Raccoon. The house was deserted, and finding the marks of the official survey running clearly through the timber, we were amused to find that the house was partly in North, partly in South Carolina. The thing touched our fancy. A negro cooked for us—what has become of him I do not know. We cut ourselves off from the mail and telegraph and received no newspapers until a packet came yesterday, and it was only a few minutes after I saw from the head-lines of the Vidette what a row was going on that I realized that strange things may happen when the king goes a-hunting."

As he paused, Miss Osborne stepped forward, the men making way for her.

"If this be true, Gov. Dangerfield, may I ask you, sir, what has become of my father?"

Gov. Dangerfield smiled.

"I regret, Miss Barbara, that I cannot answer that question; I must refer it to my daughter."

"Miss Osborne," responded Jerry, "while I should be glad to assist you in recovering your father as a slight return for your having placed mine in the Dilwell county jail and kept him there all night, I regret that I am unable to be of the slightest help to you."

The perspiration was beading Ardmore's brow, but he smiled as though in joy at Jerry's readiness.

"We have taken a number of prisoners," said Ardmore, meeting the governor's glance, "and while I do not think Gov. Osborne can possibly be of the number, yet I shall be glad to produce them all. There's a person in the corn-crib a little way across country whom I captured myself. I believe he's now tied to a mulberry tree a little way down the road, as he pretended to be the governor of South Carolina and I feared that he might do himself some harm."

Before he ceased speaking big Paul strode in, an angry and crestfallen man following at his heels.

"Oh, father!"

It was Barbara Osborne's voice; but whatever of anger or joy there may have been in her words and tone was lost in the shout of laughter that broke from Gov. Dangerfield. The governor of South Carolina was in no such high humor. He sputtered, swore, stamped his foot and struck the table with his clenched hand as he demanded to know the meaning of the outrageous indignity to which he had been subjected.

The more his friend stormed the more Gov. Dangerfield roared with laughter, but when he could control himself he laid an arresting arm on Gov. Osborne's shoulder, and spoke to Barbara.

"Barbara, may I ask whether you, like my own Jerry, have been protecting your father's fair name during his absence; and does that account for my night spent in the jail at Kildare? If so—"

Gov. Dangerfield's laughter got the better of him, but Barbara, with dignity, turned to her father.

"It is quite true, that finding your absence occasioning serious remark, while your attorney general took advantage of your absence to annoy me in a most cowardly fashion, with the kind help of Prof. Griswold I did all in my power to thwart your enemies, and to show the people of South Carolina that you were not a man to evade the responsibilities of your office. As to the details of these matters I prefer, father, to speak to you in private."

"Prof. Griswold?" repeated Gov. Osborne, haughtily. "I believe I have not the honor of the gentleman's acquaintance;" whereupon, to ease the situation, Ardmore presented his old friend.

"Gov. Osborne, allow me to present Prof. Henry Maine Griswold, associate professor of admiralty in the University of Virginia, and the author of—"

"Griswold?" The anger slowly left Gov. Osborne's face. "Do I understand that you belong to the Virginia tide-water family of that name? Then, sir, without hesitation I offer you my hand."

"Osborne," cried Gov. Dangerfield, "we have every reason to be proud of our daughters. They have done their best for us; and they seem to have acted wisely in accepting aid from these gentlemen; and now, what is to be done with Bill Appleweight?"

"We have with us that requisition you left on your desk," exclaimed Barbara, turning to her father.

"I'm afraid that won't help," laughed Gov. Osborne, "that requisition, Barbara, is purely Pickwickian in character."

"The disposition of Appleweight," said Cooke, "is a matter of delicacy for both of you gentlemen, and you will pardon me for thrusting myself forward, but that this affair may end happily for all, neither North nor South Carolina should bear the burden of prosecuting a man to whom—we may say it as between friends here—the governors of both states are under some trifling obligations."

The governor of North Carolina exchanged a glance and a nod with the governor of South Carolina.

"Therefore," resumed Cooke, "we must hit upon a plan of action that will eliminate both states from the controversy. I will, with your permission, turn Appleweight over to the United States revenue officers who are even now in this neighborhood looking for him."

(TO BE CONCLUDED.)

"Ladies and Gentlemen," Began the Governor of North Carolina.

RAISED A NOVELTY IN CORN

Western Farmer Grew Ear with an Odd Number of Rows Showing on It.

Jake Brunton, a farmer living five miles northwest of Blair, astonished the managers of the corn show there to a finish by bringing in for exhibition a full well-developed ear of corn with an odd number of rows of corn on it. It is a noted fact that all ears of corn have even number of rows—running from 14 to 22—but no odd numbers. This ear has 15 rows with 48 grains to the row. Mr. Brunton planted fifteen hills from a peculiar ear of corn of his own selection, and the planting received the same attention as his other corn. He read last year of an offer by an Illinois corn raiser of a 320-acre farm for an ear of corn with an odd number of rows. He began to experiment, and planted an odd number of grains in an odd number of hills on the 13th day of the month, and husked and counted each ear separately. A dozen corn experts examined it, and would not believe it until counted by themselves. It is a freak of which Mr. Brunton is justly proud, but he forgot to take it to Omaha to the national show.—Omaha Bee.

The Lesson of Paris.

When an American city is overwhelmed by the waters of the earth we sense the disaster, but we do not regard it as something outside the ken of our national experience. We are near enough to the primeval to accept the acts of nature with something of the fatalism of the trappers and voyageurs who used to range the woods and streams of our virgin country. But when the flood sweeps down upon a great continental capital the effect upon us is far greater. We feel that a civilization so ancient, a city that has lived upon its island in the Seine since the century before the Christian era began, must have developed some tough fiber of resistance, some mere bulwark of age, that would protect and save it. The desperate strait which Paris faces to-day teaches differently. After all, the metropolis of Europe is no more powerful against the mighty forces of the elements than is the little mining town of Cherry, Ill.

Indiscreet.

"I do so hope you will succeed," said the motherly, warm-hearted landlady.

"I am bound to," said the sanguine young inventor. "And when I do, you won't se me eating at a place like this any more."

Then, in realization of the utter impossibility of fixing things, he grabbed his hat and fled.—Unidentified.

Natural Selection.

"How did you attain your eminent position?" asked the scientist.

"Natural selection," said Senator Sorghum.

"You mean that you are specially fited by your ancestry?"

"No; nothing like that. I just naturally selected the offices I wanted and went after them."

How She Suffered.

"Ah," she sighed, "for many years I've suffered from dyspepsia."

"And don't you take anything for it?" her friend asked. "You look healthy enough."

"Oh," she replied, "my husband has it—not I."—Human Life.

LACK OF MONEY
Was a Godsend in This Case.

It is not always that a lack of money is a benefit.

A lady of Green Forest, Ark., owes her health to the fact that she could not pay in advance the fee demanded by a specialist to treat her for stomach trouble. In telling of her case she says:

"I had been treated by four different physicians during 10 years of stomach trouble. Lately I called on another who told me he could not cure me; that I had neuralgia of the stomach. Then I went to a specialist who told me I had catarrh of the stomach and said he could cure me in four months but would have to have his money down. I could not raise the necessary sum and in my extremity I was led to quit coffee and try Postum.

"So I stopped coffee and gave Postum a thorough trial and the results have been magical. I now sleep well at night, something I had not done for a long time; the pain in my stomach is gone and I am a different woman.

"I dreaded to quit coffee, because every time I had tried to stop it I suffered from severe headaches, so I continued to drink it although I had reason to believe it was injurious to me, and was the cause of my stomach trouble and extreme nervousness. But when I had Postum to shift to it was different.

"To my surprise I did not miss coffee when I began to drink Postum.

"Coffee had been steadily and surely killing me and I didn't fully realize what was doing it until I quit and changed to Postum."

Ever read the above letter? A new one appears from time to time. They are genuine, true, and full of human interest.

THE COURAGE of CAPTAIN PLUM

By JAMES OLIVER CURWOOD

ONCE upon a time there was a man named Strang who called himself King and began a Mormon monarchy on Beaver Island, near the head of Lake Michigan. A young American named Plum began the dangerous experiment of interfering with the king's love affairs, and what Plum had planned should be but a diverting adventure, became a desperate matter of life and death—love instantaneous, lilac-scented, mysterious and ardent.

The Britt Tribune has the following to say concerning one of our most popular farmers: "Fred Haupt, a young German, worked for the late J. M. Elder for many years and finally bought a piece of land of Brockway & Elder and started out for himself. When he went away J. M. advised him to marry the cook who had lived in the family about the same length of time that Fred had. Fred took the advice; this was many years ago. Today Fred owns 480 acres of land down in TwinLake township; he still has the cook and three girls and a son-in-law, and sells two or three car-loads of cattle and hogs every year, buys an "80" once in a while, and is the best contented Dutchman in seven counties, and started with nothing twenty-five years ago."

MANY ATTEND FAIR

Over 29,000 People Witness Real Opening of Big Event

SATURDAY, CHILDREN'S DAY

Great Pacers Largely Responsible for Enormous Attendance — Carolina Crowley Carries Off First Prize in Cooking Contest.

Des Moines, Aug. 29.—More than 20,000 people thronged the state fair grounds Saturday and nearly half of this number were children. Ideal weather conditions made it a day that could not be bettered for sight seeing on the grounds.

Outside the races, Saturday was wholly and distinctly children's day at the fair, even though the gate receipts show that thousands more of adults visited the grounds than on children's day last year. The programs in the stock pavilions and everywhere were made up with a view to tickling the youngsters, but the old folks enjoyed it, too, and they came and came until all records for attendance were broken.

The children came early to the fair, hundreds being on the job among the cattle, horses, sheep and swine barns before the show men were up and ready to start off the merry-go-rounds and the Ferris wheels.

Naturally the Shetland ponies made the biggest hit with the youngsters as far as the live stock was concerned, but the exhibit of the state fish and game department was a close second. Thousands of children loitered all day about the "zoo," watching the ducks paddling about in the water, viewing with delight and wonderment the beautifully plumed pheasants, and gazing with ecstatic joy at the fish swimming about in plain sight in the canvas bottomed ponds.

The pony show in the stock pavilion during the day was a great drawing card, both for the little folks and for the grown ups interested in the equine bantams. Expert horsemen asserted that the Shetland ponies shown in the pavilion during the judging were the equal or better of any Shetland ponies shown at any fair in the country.

An animal show, a Chinese human laundry, jubilee singers, a Japanese village, a human roulette wheel, diving girls, show girls, and a wonderfully big woman are some of the shows to be seen on Midway, the amusement center of the fair grounds. These are part of the seventeen Parker shows secured by the fair management to form the main center of the amusement section.

As good a class of vaudeville is served to visitors at the state fair as may be seen on the average week at any of the local playhouses. Horses and ponies appear in three of the acts and the other three are filled with acrobatic stunts and dancing.

"Frontier Days in Iowa," an elaborate Pain spectacle, was produced Saturday night for the first time in front of the amphitheater at the state fair grounds. Three hundred people participated in the performance, which is a reproduction of the Spirit Lake massacre of 1857.

In the girls' cooking contest held Saturday morning in the college building, Miss Crowley of Berwick carried off first honors, Helen A. Wentworth of State Center was second, Lillian Taff of Panora third, and Mildred Dyer of Des Moines fourth. Biscuits were baked by the girls and steaks broiled.

Twelve girls participated. This is three times the number who took part last year. Miss Neal Knowles conducted the class.

In the boys' judging contest, forty-two participated. The boys passed opinions on horses and swine and on corn.

Lady Maude C. of M. W. Savage's aggregation of world champion pacers, surprised her stablemates by winning the feature event of the racing card, beating George Gano, Minor Heir and Hedgewood Boy in the special dash. The time of the mile was 2:05¾.

Music day at the Iowa state fair Sunday brought 19,000 people to the exposition grounds, a great majority of them being Des Moines people. The total attendance last year on Sunday was 17,154.

Playwright Kills Self.

Plainfield, N. J., Aug. 29.—James W. Harkins, a playwright, committed suicide here in a bed chamber of his cousin, James Harkins' home. He shot himself in the head with a revolver. Ill health was the cause.

Divining Rod 200 Years Old.

Winslow W. Fifield of Medford, Mass., owns a metallic divining rod brought from England more than two hundred years ago by one of his ancestors. The rod, says Mr. Fifield, has been used successfully all over New England and in the western mining districts. It is attached to whalebone handles 12 inches long and weighs two ounces. The handles have inscriptions on them which are almost obliterated by age.

The person who brought the rod to America was Isaac Greenleaf, who settled in Massachusetts. The rod became famous as a finder of water. After marking the place of many springs the rod was used in California, Colorado and North Carolina for locating by men in quest of gold mines and other metals. One person who used it with particular success was a blind man, in whose hands the rod is said to have done marvels.

A Strong Preacher.

The minister's eight-year-old daughter was returning with her parents from church, where the district superintendent had that morning occupied the pulpit.

"Oh, father," asked the little girl, her face alive with enthusiasm, "don't you think Brother C. is a very strong preacher? I do."

Gratified by this evidence of unusual intelligence on the part of his offspring, the minister eagerly inquired into her reasons for her statement.

"Oh," replied the little miss, artlessly, "didn't you see how the dust rose when he stamped his feet?"—Judge.

The Counterfeit Southerner.

Of course, there are many counterfeits. A most amusing imitation is one that often passes for the typical southerner in New York. This satchel-mouthed braggart infests the cafes and demands attention by his abusing the waiter for offending his delicate sense of honor. "I hate a nigger, suh," he loudly proclaims, which is a sentiment that one never hears from those to the manner born. He haunts the theaters and parades the streets, since it is poor fun to practise his gentility in private.

He wears a wide black hat, mounts the table and yells whenever the band plays a southern melody. Such a pretentious caricature would be harmless enough, but for the ridicule he brings upon the south. Unfortunately, popular authors seem to accept him at face value and exploit him in novel plays where a "southerner" is a essary part of the stage machine Everybody's Magazine.

Wasted Sarcasm.

The Philadelphia milk dealers recently raised the price of product to nine cents a quart and lowered it again to eight appea have been the subjects of a great of unjust censure. They annou at the time of the raise that could not be sold at eight cents out loss. Finding that the consu would not pay the new price, how they are continuing to sell at the thereby qualifying as genuine ph thropists. Every purchaser of at eight cents a quart will doub hereafter feel that he is an obje charity.

Hoodwinking Clergymen

When a small clique of men put up a scheme to harness the clergy of America and induce the ministers to, in turn "hitch up" the members of the churches, we should all take notice.

They couldn't harness the preachers in a bad cause except by deceiving them.

Ministers of the gospel are essentially and fundamentally honest but, like all men who work for the public good, they are at times mislead by false statements.

Trust them when they have exact truth to speak from.

Now for the story which should interest every one for we are all either receivers of wages or we pay to wage earners and the freedom of each individual is at issue.

In various papers the following statement has been printed. Read it carefully at least twice.

"Interest in Labor Sunday.

"Labor Sunday—the Sunday preceding Labor day—will be observed generally this year and in future years throughout the United States. This because of the American Federation of Labor declaration for the observance of that day. The numerous letters recently received at American Federation of Labor headquarters from ministers is an assurance that interest in the idea of giving special attention to the cause of labor from the pulpit one day in the twelve months is widespread. Our readers are urged to try to bring about an understanding in their respective districts with representatives of the church so that ministers will make addresses that may attract trade unionists to the churches in large numbers for the day. Ministers should say what they think on the occasion in order that their trade union hearers may put the right estimate as to where the church stands on the question of the organization of labor. The more the subject is discussed the better will it be for labor. Union ethics are sound. —American Federationist."

Observe that "Labor Union" men "are urged" to induce ministers to make addresses that will attract trade unionists to the churches "for the day." "Ministers should say," etc., and winds up with "Union ethics are sound;" observe the hidden threat.

This is clipped from the American Federationist the organ of Sam Gompers, et al.

This clipping has been sent to papers throughout the country and the Typographical Union men in the newspaper offices instructed to "urge" that it be printed.

That is one of the ways of the "machine."

It looks harmless so the papers print it.

But! Let's lift the cover and look under.

The hidden motive is as dangerous to the peace and liberty of the citizens as a coiled rattlesnake in the grass.

Organization by workmen to peacefully and successfully present their side is necessary and most commendable.

There are such organizations now rapidly winning their way to public confidence without strikes, dynamite or killing fellow workmen.

(Some facts on this matter a little further along in this article.)

We see here a demand on the ministers of God, that they endorse and help build up the strike-producing, boycotting and violent American Federation of Labor.

Think of the man of God who teaches brotherly love being covertly ordered to praise and help get new members for an organization with a record for violence, crime and murder done by its members the like of which the world has never seen.

Think of the thousands of women made widows and the increasing thousands of children left fatherless by the pistol, club, dynamite and boot heel of members of this Labor Trust.

Any one who recalls the countless murders done in the multitude of strikes in the past few years will agree this is no exaggeration.

Take just one as an illustration:

There were some thirty men murdered and over 5000 bruised and maimed in the Chicago teamster's strike.

There is seldom a day passes but somewhere in our country from one to a score of our fellow men are assaulted or murdered by members of this band.

Then remember the homes blown up or burned. The families hounded, the rioting, burning of street cars, wrecking of trains and attempted or successful killing of passengers.

The general disturbance of industry and the thousands of dollars forced from tax payers to pay extra police, sheriffs and militia to protect, even in a feeble way, the citizens from the mobs of members of the American Federation of Labor.

Then you will realize why the great peace-loving majority of over 80 million Americans protest against the growth of this crime-tainted organization comprising perhaps one and one-half million men, of which it is estimated at least seven-tenths are peace-loving citizens and are members by coercion and are not in sympathy with the three-tenths who have gained control and force their methods.

We find that a few designing men have seized control of the American Federation of Labor, just as some shrewd capitalists have secured control of some railroads and other interests and are now twisting and turning them into machines for personal profit and fame.

These men cunningly plan to force workmen to join and pay 25 to 75 cents a month in fees.

Various methods are used to "induce" workmen to join.

First, they talk of the "tyranny of capital" making slaves of workmen.

Then they work up enthusiasm about the "brotherhood of man" and other talk which experience has shown excites the emotions of workmen and they are induced to join and pay fees to the leaders.

The 5000 workmen in Battle Creek are, as a rule, free from the dictates of the great Labor Trust and still get the highest wages in Michigan. If they had yielded to the smooth talk of the agents of the trust and joined, they would pay in fees from $1250.00 to $2000.00 a month to the big trust and be subject to strike orders any time.

Now they save that and put the money into homes and family comforts

But the managers of the American Federation of Labor have worked hard and long to harness them.

The trust has sent small bales of money and last winter 18 "organizers" to tie up Battle Creek. They hired halls, gave picture shows, smokers, etc., as an investment, looking to rich returns when they succeeded in having them tied hand and foot.

But they failed and the last of these "organizers" left Battle Creek on May 1st saying "it's no use."

The workmen knew the record of this great trust and formed their own association to protect their rights and also to protect them from the big Labor Trust.

In Philadelphia some 4000 independent street car men, who mainly had families, had their own union and refused to join the big trust, preferring to be free to work or not as they pleased.

But the trust planned to force them into the fee-paying ranks, so a strike was ordered to compel the traction company to kick out these men and hire only Labor Trust members.

It was not a question of wages or hours but to push the free men out of their positions where they were earning good money to support their families. The strike was ordered, not to raise wages or reduce hours, remember, but solely to throw out members of an independent union and make places only for Labor Trust members, and thus show the independent men they could not earn a living unless they first paid fees to the trust managers.

Incidentally the people of Philadelphia must submit to no car service, rioting and bloodshed with millions in losses while these fee-hunting, notoriety seeking trust leaders were teaching the world that industry cannot be carried on except by workmen who first bend the knee, bow the head and pay fees.

How these men as strike leaders love to see their names in the papers each morning! It's meat and bread to their souls.

Then think of the lordly power, and don't forget the steady flow of money squeezed from the workman's hard earned pay enevelope.

But when these leaders "tie up" any industry no man can hold a job who refuses to pay fines even on trumped up charges, and steadily pay fees whatever they are.

The workman is absolutely at the mercy of this band of men who have secured and hold control.

Many and many an honest workman has raised his voice and appealed to his fellows to rise and throw off the yoke of Gompers, et al. But, as one writes, "At every convention of the American Federation of Labor, strong opposition comes up but at the critical moment the impassioned orator appears and most dramatically puts the spot light on the leader and covers him with a mawkish film of 'martyrdom' and the emotional delegates yell in delight, forgetting the instructions of the peaceful workingmen at home who desire to free themselves from the odium of membership under the great advocates of strike, boycott, violence and hate."

So we see the unequalled insolence with which these trust leaders propose to "induce" ministers to pull their chestnuts from the fire by preaching modern aggressive and violent labor trust methods.

There is a better way to secure justice for workers, as will appear further along.

Just a little diversion here.

I am charged with having first brought to the attention of the public some years ago, the name "Labor Trust."

A trust is a combination of men or organizations for the purpose of selling their product at a profit and restricting production to effect it.

We will say a large Oil Company gathers in smaller ones and thus controls production.

The Labor Trust "gathers in" local trade organizations and thus has power to say how much work each man shall do.

The Oil Company then fixes prices.

The Labor Trust does likewise.

The Oil Company may "use methods" to force an unwilling dealer to join.

The Labor Trust men go further and slug the independent man if he tries to sell his labor without paying fees and "obeying orders." They are both exactly alike in purpose, which, in both cases is entirely selfish to gain power and money for the leaders.

Certain Labor Trust members do not hesitate to use violence, dynamiting of property, burning homes of independent men and even murder to force obedience.

The Oil Company doesn't go so far.

Both are extremely dangerous to the welfare of people and communities, for power placed in the hands of a few men either representing Capital or Labor is almost always abused and the public suffers.

Remember, reader, that your safety lies in strenuous opposition to all trusts which try to ride over and dictate to the people.

Only by opposing their growth can you retain your personal liberty.

Now to ministers.

The average congregation is made up of about 90 per cent. of free citizens and much less than 10 per cent. of members of the Labor Trust.

The free citizen wants to hear words defending the rights and independence of the common man, free from the arbitrary dictates of any self-seeking organization either of Capital or Labor.

The merchant, lawyer, school teacher, doctor, clerk, farmer and workman rebels against any forcible stopping of trains, boats, street cars, or factories, for the prosperity of the community is entirely dependent on steady continuance of these things.

Men don't like strikes, boycotts, injured workmen or burned cars and factories.

A famous divine says: "These men may hate capitalists but their hate for other laboring men burns like a flame, eats like nitric acid, is malignant beyond all description."

Then we remember cases of acid throwing, eyes gouged out, children pursued, women stripped, homes destroyed, men murdered and the long list of atrocities practised Labor Trust members on other hu beings who cannot agree with trust methods.

Now for the better way.

WORTH MOUNTAINS OF GOLD

During Change of Life, Says Mrs. Chas. Barclay

Graniteville, Vt. — "I was passing through the Change of Life and suffered from nervousness and other annoying symptoms, and I can truly say that Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound has proved worth mountains of gold to me, as it restored my health and strength. I never forget to tell my friends what Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound has done for me during this trying period. Complete restoration to health means so much to me that for the sake of other suffering women I am willing to make my trouble public so you may publish this letter." — MRS. CHAS. BARCLAY, R.F.D., Graniteville, Vt.

No other medicine for woman's ills has received such wide-spread and unqualified endorsement. No other medicine we know of has such a record of cures of female ills as has Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound.

For more than 30 years it has been curing female complaints such as inflammation, ulceration, local weaknesses, fibroid tumors, irregularities, periodic pains, backache, indigestion and nervous prostration, and it is unequalled for carrying women safely through the period of change of life. It costs but little to try Lydia E. Pinkham's Vegetable Compound, and, as Mrs. Barclay says, it is "worth mountains of gold" to suffering women.

Centennial Celebration of the Republic is Opened

MANY NATIONS TAKING PART

Unveiling of Monuments, Dedication of New Republic Buildings and Other Events Are on the Program.

Mexico City, Sept. 1.—September will be one continuous holiday throughout the republic of Mexico, as the inhabitants of this country have set aside the month to celebrate the centennial of their independence. Just 100 years ago Father Miguel Hidalgo, Mexico's first and greatest champion of liberty, organized the revolt against the mother country which ultimately resulted in Mexico's freedom and the death of that brave patriot, and the promoters of the centenial have planned some event for every day in the month to honor the brave men who died in the cause of liberty.

Monuments will be unveiled, new public buildings will be dedicated; there will be parades and bull fights, literary and athletic contests, as well as banquets and receptions.

Every civilized country in the world with which Mexico maintains diplomatic relations will be represented at the centennial and foreign warships will lie at anchor in the harbors on both coasts.

United States Represented.

The United States is represented by a special ambassador, former Gov. Curtis Guild of Massachusetts, and a commission composed of Harrison Grey Otis of Los Angeles, Alexander Rook of Pittsburg and Justice Gerard of the supreme court of New York.

France, Germany and China have signified their intention of presenting a lasting memorial to Mexico on the occasion of the centennial. The first will return the silver keys to Mexico City given to the French on their entry into the capital; Germany will erect a monument to Humboldt; and China is preparing a surprise.

Contrary to the policy of most expositions, no money has been invested in temporary buildings, but the funds have been used in making permanent improvements throughout the republic.

The celebration was formally opened today by President Diaz, with the dedication of a new general insane asylum. Tomorrow a hygienic exposition will be opened under the auspices of the superior board of health, and will remain open during the entire month.

Big Doings on September 16.

One of the biggest days in the celebration will be September 16. It was on this day in the year 1810 that Aldama, a Mexican patriot, arrived at the home of Father Hidalgo in Dolores, and informed the priest and his friend, Allende, that the conspiracy against the Spanish government had been discovered.

The fighting priest immediately arose and exclaimed: "Gentlemen, we are lost; there is no recourse but to attack the Spaniards." This was the beginning of the revolution, which continued for several months, and resulted in the execution of the brave priest on July 31, 1811.

This patriot's memory will be fittingly celebrated on the 16th by the dedication of a monument to independence on the Pasco de la Reforma by President Diaz, at which time the proclamation of independence will be read. This will be followed by a great parade of 10,000 troops through the principal streets of the city to the palace, where they will be reviewed by President Diaz. In the evening there will be a number of patriotic entertainments held in the various theaters and parks.

Other important events in the celebration that deserve special mention are the opening of the Congress of Americanists on September 8; the inauguration of the waterworks in the capital city on September 13; the laying of the cornerstone of the new legislative palace by President Diaz and the minister of public works on the 23d; the dedication of the reconstructed tunnel of Tequisquiac and the new works in connection with the drainage of the Valley of Mexico under the auspices of the ministry of public works on the 26th; and the grand velada in the Arbeu theater for the distribution of premiums to the winners in the historic literary and musical contests, conducted by the department of public instruction, and the distribution of prizes to winners in the contests conducted by the National Centennial commission, on the last day of the celebration.

Deafness Cannot Be Cured

by local applications, as they cannot reach the diseased portion of the ear. There is only one way to cure deafness, and that is by constitutional remedies. Deafness is caused by an inflamed condition of the mucous lining of the Eustachian Tube. When this tube is inflamed you have a rumbling sound or imperfect hearing, and when it is entirely closed, Deafness is the result, and unless the inflammation can be taken out and this tube restored to its normal condition, hearing will be destroyed forever; nine cases out of ten are caused by Catarrh, which is nothing but an inflamed condition of the mucous surfaces.

We will give One Hundred Dollars for any case of Deafness (caused by catarrh) that cannot be cured by Hall's Catarrh Cure. Send for circulars, free.

WESTERN CANADA'S 1910 CROPS

160 ACRE FARMS IN WESTERN CANADA FREE

Wheat Yield in Many Districts Will Be From 25 to 35 Bushels Per Acre

Land sales and homestead entries increasing. No cessation in numbers going from United States. Wonderful opportunities remain for those who intend making Canada their home. New districts being opened up for settlement. Many farmers will net, this year, $10 to $15 per acre from their wheat crop. All the advantages of old settled countries are there. Good schools, churches, splendid markets, excellent railway facilities. See the grain exhibit at the different State and some of the County fairs.

Letters similar to the following are received every day, testifying to satisfactory conditions; other districts are as favorably spoken of:

THEY SENT FOR THEIR SON.

Maidstone, Sask., Canada, Aug. 5th, 1910.

"My parents came here from Cedar Falls, Iowa, four years ago, and were so well pleased with this country they sent to Coeur d'Alene for me. I have taken up a homestead near them, and am perfectly satisfied to stop here." Leonard Douglas.

WANTS SETTLER'S RATE FOR HIS STOCK.

Stettler, Alberta, July 31st, 1910.

"Well I got up here from Forest City, Iowa, last Spring in good shape with the stock and everything. Now, I have got two boys back in Iowa yet, and I am going back there now soon to get them and another car up here this fall. What I would like to know is, if there is any chance to get a cheap rate back again, and when we return to Canada I will call at your office for our certificates."
Yours truly, H. A. Wik.

WILL MAKE HIS HOME IN CANADA.

Brainerd, Minn., Aug. 1st, 1910.

"I am going to Canada a week from today and intend to make my home there. My husband has been there six weeks and is well pleased with the country; so he wants me to come as soon as possible. He filed on a claim near Landis, Sask., and by his description of it it must be a pretty place. My brother-in-law, Mr. Frank J. Zimmer, lives there and it was through him that we decided to locate in Canada."
Yours truly,
Mrs. Richard Henry Ebinger.

TAKES HIS BROTHER-IN-LAW'S WORD FOR IT.

Taylors Falls, Minn., Aug. 7, 1910.

"I shall go to Camrose this Fall with my cattle and household goods. I got a poor crop here this year and my brother-in-law, Axel Nordstrom in Camrose, wants me to come there. He formerly lived in Wilton, North Dakota. I am going to buy or take homestead when I get there, but I do not want to travel two times there, for I take my brother-in-law's word about the country, and want to get your low rate."
Yours truly
Peter A. Nelson.

WANTS TO RETURN TO CANADA.

Vesta, Minn., July 24th, 1910

"I went to Canada nine years ago and took up a quarter section of railroad land and a homestead, but my boys have never taken up any land yet. I still hold the railroad land. I had to come back to the states on account of my health. Please let me know at once if I can get the cheap rates to Ponoka, Alberta."
Yours truly,
Geo. Paskewitz.
Vesta, Minn.

BRITT

From the News:

J. W. Knadler, of Corwith, was in Britt the latter part of the week.

Will Wright has secured the job of janitor for the Britt public schools for the coming year.

John Hammill has purchased what is known as the Baker farm two miles north west of Britt, the consideration being $75.00 per acre.

Carl Miller leaves this week for Des Moines, where he has a good position with the state fair management.

Charley Erwin had the bones in the right fore arm fractured last Saturday in attempting to crank an automobile.

Mrs. P. H. Madison, who has been seriously ill for some time, was taken to Rochester, Minn., Monday, where a surgical operation will be performed. She was accompanied by her husband and daughter Valida.

Joe Goss met with an unusual accident last Monday while engaged in disembling a piece of old machinery. In some way one of the pieces broke and flying upwards hit Mr. Goss a severe blow in the head from which he bled so profusely that he has since been very weak. He was hurried to town where the wound was dressed and he is doing fine now.

Not a minute should be lost when a child shows symptoms of croup. Chamberlain's Cough Remedy given as soon as the child becomes hoarse, or even after the croupy cough appears, will prevent the attack. Sold by all dealers.

Of Interest to Book Lovers

This is an age of books, and every intelligent reader feels the need of keeping informed on the best among the thousands of new volumes that come from the press every year. The best way to do this is to subscribe for a good metropolitan newspaper that prints daily reviews of the most important books as fast as they appear. The Chicago Record-Herald is generally conceded to be the leading literary daily west of New York. It gives more attention to books than any other Chicago paper, treating them as a legitimate theme of everyday news and covering the whole range of current literature as if it believed books were actually as interesting to its readers as, say, the pork market or the latest murder. Its literary department, under the editorship of Edwin L. Shuman, is undoubtedly the most complete and the most ably conducted in the West. Mr. Shuman's literary judgments are eagerly sought by authors themselves and are quoted all over the country, and so are those of his able corps of skilled assistants. Walter Littlefield's weekly news letter from New York keeps the Record-Herald's readers informed on all the forthcoming books of importance, and a cable dispatch from London every Sunday gives the latest book news of the English capital. Naturally persons of literary tastes prefer the Record Herald to all other Chicago morning papers.

Your complexion as well as your temper is rendered miserable by a disordered liver. By taking Chamberlain's Stomach and Liver Tablets you can improve both. Sold by all dealers.

For a short time only we will be able to get you the DesMoines Daily Capital for the balance of the year 1910 for One Dollar. Subscribe now. 51-3

Good Dramatic Criticism

The late Richard Mansfield always felt that he owed more to the wise discernment and staunch support of The Chicago Record-Herald than to any other agency, outside himself, that contributed to his ultimate triumph as an actor. Ask any disinterested observer of theatrical matters today who is the best dramatic critic in Chicago, and ten to one he will say James O'Donnell Bennett of the Chicago Record-Herald. Mr. Bennett is unquestionably the leading critic in his domain in the West. He writes with a fearless fairness and a keen appreciation of real merit that makes his articles a genuine force for the betterment of the stage. His knowledge of the history and principles of dramatic art is sufficient to lend depth to his utterances, yet he has the newspaper man's knack of making his work breezy and interesting for the average man and woman. His columns are always newsy as well as reliable in their judgments. Anyone who will follow the dramatic, musical, literary and art departments of the Chicago Record-Herald from season to season need have no fear about keeping abreast of all that is finest and finest in the movement of modern culture.

THEODORE ROOSEVELT ON OUR NATIONAL EFFICIENCY

In Address Before the Conservation Congress at St. Paul He Says New Methods of Developing and Using Natural Resources of Country Are Needed.

St. Paul, Minn., Sept. 6.—Speaking on "National Efficiency" before the conservation congress today, former President Roosevelt impressed on his hearers the fact that conservation has become a national duty and must be looked at from a new point of view and accomplished by new methods of developing and using the natural resources of the country. His address was the feature of the day's program and was listened to by a throng that tested the capacity of the hall and that frequently applauded the colonel's vigorous language. The address in full was as follows:

America's reputation for efficiency stands deservedy high throughout the world. We are efficient probably to the full-limit that any nation can attain by the methods hitherto used. There is great reason to be proud of our achievements, and yet no reason to believe that we cannot excel our past. Through a practically unrestrained individualism, we have reached a pitch of literary unexampled material prosperity; although the distribution of this prosperity leaves much to be desired from the standpoint of justice and fair dealing. But we have not only allowed the individual a free hand, which was in the main right; we have also allowed great corporations to act as though they were individuals, and to exercise the rights of individuals, in addition to using the vast combined power of high organization and enormous wealth for their own advantage. This development of corporate action, it is true, is doubtless in large part responsible for the gigantic development of our natural resources, but it is not less responsible for waste, destruction, and monopoly on an equally gigantic scale.

The method of reckless and uncontrolled private use and waste has done for us all the good it ever can, and it is time to put an end to it before it does all the evil it easily may. We have passed the time when heedless waste and destruction, and arrogant monopoly, are any longer permissible. Henceforth we must seek National efficiency by a new and a better way, by the way of the orderly development and use, coupled with the preservation, of our natural resources by making the most of what we have for the benefit of all of us, instead of leaving the sources of material prosperity open to indiscriminate exploitation. These are some of the reasons why it is wise that we should abandon the old point of view, and why conservation has become a patriotic duty.

Waterways Development.

One of the greatest of our conservation problems is the wise and prompt development and use of the waterways of this Nation. The Twin Cities, lying as they do at the headwaters of the Mississippi, are not upon the direct line of the proposed lakes to the gulf deep waterway. Yet they are deeply interested in its prompt completion, as well as in the deepening and regulation of the Mississippi to the mouth of the Missouri and to the gulf. The project for a great trunk waterway, an arm of the sea, extending from the Gulf of Mexico to the Great Lakes, should not be abandoned. The lakes to the gulf deep waterway, and the development of the rivers which flow into it, should be pushed to completion vigorously and without delay.

In nearly every river city from St. Paul to the gulf the water-front is controlled by the railways. Nearly every artificial waterway in the United States, either directly or indirectly, is under the same control. It goes without saying that (unless the people prevent it in advance) the railways will attempt to take control of our waterways as fast as they are improved and completed; nor would I blame them, if we, the people, are supine in the matter. We must see to it that adequate terminals are provided in every city and town on every improved waterway, terminals open under reasonable conditions to the use of every citizen, and rigidly protected against monopoly; and we must compel the railways to co-operate with the waterways continuously, effectively, and under reasonable conditions. Unless we do so the railway lines will refuse to deliver freight to the boat lines, either openly or by imposing prohibitory conditions, and the waterways once improved will do comparatively little for the benefit of the people who pay the bill.

Adequate terminals properly controlled and open through lines by rail and boat are two absolutely essential conditions to the usefulness of inland waterway development. I believe furthermore that the railways should be prohibited from owning, controlling, or carrying any interest in the boat lines on our rivers, unless under the strictest regulation and control of the Inter-State Commerce Commission, so that the shippers' interests may be fully protected.

The National Forests.

If any proof were needed that forest protection is a National duty, the recent destruction of forests in the west by fire would supply it. Even with the aid of the army added to that of the forest service the loss has been severe. Without either it would have been vastly greater.

But the forest service does more than protect the National forests against fire. It makes them practically and increasingly useful as well. During the last year for which I have the figures the National forests were used by 22,000 cattlemen with their herds, 5,000 sheepmen with their flocks, 5,000 timbermen with their crews, and 45,000 miners. More than 5,000 persons used them for other special industries. Nearly 34,000 settlers had the free use of wood. The total resident population of the National forests is about a quarter of a million, which is larger than the population of certain states. More than 700,000 acres of agricultural land have been patented or listed for patent within the forests, and the reports of the forest officers show that more than 400,000 people a year use the forests for recreation, camping, hunting, fishing, and similar purposes. All this is done, of course, without injury to the timber, which has a value of at least a thousand million dollars. Moreover, the National forests protect the water supply of a thousand cities and towns, about 800 irrigation projects, and more than 300 power projects, not counting the use of water for these and other purposes by individual settlers.

Country Life Institute.

The investigations of the Country Life Commission have led the farmers of this country to realize that they have not been getting their fair share of progress and all that it brings. Some of our farming communities in the Mississippi valley and in the middle west have made marvelous progress, yet even the best of them, like communities of every other kind, are not beyond improvement, while much needs to be done in some other sections to improve country life. As yet we know comparatively little of the basic facts of rural civilization. The means for better farming we have studied with care, but to better living on the farm and to better business on the farm the farmers themselves have given scant attention. One of the most urgent needs of our civilization is that the farmers themselves should undertake to get for themselves a better knowledge along these lines, and then to apply it. Sir Horace Plunkett, for many years a Wyoming cattleman, and now devoting himself in Ireland to the country life problem there, has suggested in his recent book on the "Country Life Problem in America" the creation of a Country Life institute as a center where the work and knowledge of the whole world concerning country life may be brought together for the use of every nation. I am strongly in sympathy with this idea, and I hope to see it carried out with the co-operation and assistance of our own people. Last spring, while visiting the capital of Hungary, Buda-Pesth, I was immensely impressed by the Museum of Country Life, containing an extraordinary series of studies in agriculture, in stock-raising, in forestry, in mining; the exhibits were of the utmost practical importance and were also intensely interesting and instructive.

As a people we have not yet learned to economize. One of the virtues we Americans most need is thrift. It is a mere truism to say that luxury and extravagance are not good for a Nation. So far as they affect character, the loss they cause may be beyond computation. But in the material sense there is a loss greater than is caused by both extravagance and luxury put together. I mean the needless, useless, and excessive loss to our people from premature death and avoidable diseases. Wholly apart from the grief, the suffering, and the wretchedness which they cause, the material loss each year has been calculated at nearly twice what it costs to run the Federal government. In addition to the state and city health officers and organizations, there is urgently needed a Federal bureau of health, to act, so far as the National government properly may, to relieve our people from this dreadful burden.

National Conservation Commission.

One of the most important meetings in our recent history was that of the governors in the white house in May, 1908, to consider the conservation question. By the advice of the governors the meeting was followed by the appointment of a National conservation commission. The meeting of the governors directed the attention of the country to conservation as nothing else could have done, while the work of the commission gave the movement definiteness and supplied it with a practical program. But at the moment when the commission was ready to begin the campaign for putting its program into effect an amendment to the Sundry civil service bill was introduced by a congressman from Minnesota with the purpose of putting a stop to the work so admirably begun. Congress passed the amendment. Its object was to put an end to the work of a number of commissions, which had been appointed by the president, and whose contribution to the public welfare had been simply incalculable. Among these were the commission for reorganizing the business methods of the government, the public lands commission, the country life commission, and the National conservation commission itself. When I signed the Sundry civil service bill containing this amendment, I transmitted with it as my last official act a memorandum declaring that the amendment was void, because it was an unconstitutional interference with the rights of the executive, and that if I were to remain president I would pay to it no attention whatever.

The National conservation commission thereupon became dormant. The suspension of its work came at a most unfortunate time, and there was serious danger that the progress already made would be lost. At this critical moment the National conservation association was organized. It took up the work which otherwise would not have been done, and it exercised a most useful influence in preventing bad legislation, in securing the introduction of better conservation measures at the past session of congress, and in promoting the passage of wise laws. It deserves the confidence and support of every citizen interested in the wise development and preservation of our natural resources, and in preventing them from passing into the hands of uncontrolled monopolies. It joins with the National conservation congress in holding this meeting. I am here by the joint invitation of both.

Unless the governments of all the American republics, including our own, enact in time such laws as will both protect their natural wealth and promote their legitimate and reasonable development, future generations will owe their misfortunes to us of today. A great patriotic duty calls upon us. We owe it to ourselves and to them to give the American republics all the help we can. The cases in which we have failed should be no less instructive than the cases in which we have succeeded. With prompt action and good will the task of saving the resources for the people is full of hope for us all.

State and Federal Control.

But while we of the United States are anxious, as I believe we are able, to be of assistance to others, there are problems of our own which we must not overlook. One of the most important conservation questions of the moment relates to the control of water power monopoly in the public interest. There is apparent to the judicious observer a distinct tendency on the part of our opponents to cloud the issue by raising the question of state as against federal jurisdiction. We are ready to meet that issue if it is forced upon us. But there is no hope for the plain people in such conflicts of jurisdiction. The essential question is not one of hair-splitting legal technicalities. It is simply this: Who can best regulate the special interests for the public good? Most of the predatory corporations are interstate or have interstate affiliations. Therefore they are largely out of reach of effective state control, and fall of necessity within the federal jurisdiction. One of the prime objects of those among them that are grasping and greedy is to avoid any effective control either by state or nation; and they advocate at this time state control simply because they believe it to be the least effective. In the great fight of the people to drive the special interests from the domination of our government, the nation is stronger and its jurisdiction is more effective than that of any state. The most effective weapon against these great corporations, most of which are financed and owned on the Atlantic coast, will be federal laws and the federal executive. That is why I so strongly oppose the demand to turn these matters over to the states. It is fundamentally a demand against the interest of the plain people, of the people of small means, against the interest of our children and our children's children; and it is primarily in the interest of the great corporations which desire to escape all government control.

The Conservation Fight.

On of the difficulties in putting into practise the conservation idea is that the field to which it applies is constantly growing in the public mind. It has been no slight task to bring before 100,000 people a great conception like that of conservation, and convince them that it is right. This much we have accomplished. But there remains much to be cleared up, and many misunderstandings to be removed. These misunderstandings are due in part at least to direct misrepresentation by the men to whose interest it is that conservation should not prosper. For example, we find it constantly said by men who should know better that temporary wthdrawals, such as the withdrawals of coal lands, will permanently check development. Yet the fact is that these withdrawals have no purpose except to prevent the coal lands from passing into private ownership until congress can pass laws to open them to development under conditions just alike to the public and to the men who will do the developing.

Abuses committed in the name of a just cause are familiar to all of us. Many unwise things are done and many unwise measures are advocated in the name of conservation, either through ignorance, or by those whose interest lies not in promoting the movement, but in retarding it. For example, to stop water power development by needless refusal to issue permits for water power or private irrigation works on the public lands inevitably leads many men, friendly to conservation and believers in its general principles, to assume that its practical application is necessarily a check upon progress. Nothing could be more mistaken. The idea, widely circulated of late, that conservation means locking up of the natural resources for the exclusive use of future generations, is wholly mistaken. Our purpose is to make full use of these resources, but to consider our sons and daughters as well as ourselves; just as a farmer uses his farm in ways to preserve its future usefulness.

But in spite of these difficulties, most of which are doubtless inevitable in any movement of this kind, conservation has made marvelous progress. I have been astounded and delighted on my return from abroad at the progress made while I was away. We have a right to congratulate ourselves on this marvelous progress; but there is no reason for believing that the fight is won. In the beginning the special interests, who are our chief opponents in the conservation fight, paid little heed to the movement, because they neither understood it, nor saw that if it won they must lose. But with the progress of conservation in the minds of our people the fight is getting sharper. The nearer we approach to victory, the bitterer the opposition that we must meet, and the greater the need for caution and watchfulness. Open opposition we can overcome, but I warn you especially against the men who come to congresses such as this, ostensibly as disinterested citizens, but actually as the paid agents of the special interests.

This congress is a direct apeal to the patriotism of our whole people. The nation wisely looks to such gatherings for counsel and leadership. Let that leadership be sound, definite, practical, and on the side of all the people. It would be no small misfortune if a meeting such as this should ever fall into the hands of the open enemies or false friends of the great movement which it represents.

It is our duty and our desire to make this land of ours a better home for the race, but our duty does not stop there. We must also work for a better nation to live in this better land. The development and conservation of our national character and our free institutions must go hand in hand with the development and conservation of our natural resources, which the governor's conference so well called the foundations of our prosperity. Whatever progress we may make as a nation, whatever wealth we may accumulate, however far we may push mechanical development and production, we shall never reach a point where our welfare can depend in the last analysis on anything but honesty, courage, loyalty, and good citizenship. The homely virtues are the lasting virtues, and the road which leads to them is the road to genuine and lasting success.

What this country needs is what every free country must set before it as the great goal toward which it works—an equal oportunity for life, liberty and the pursuit of happiness for every one of its citizens. To achieve this end we must put a stop to the improper political dominion, no less than to the improper economic dominion, of the great special interests. This country, its natural resources, its natural advantages, its opportunities and its institutons, belong to all its citizens. They cannot be enjoyed fully and freely under any governmen in which the special interests as such have a voice. The supreme political task of our day, the indispensable condition of national efficiency and national welfare, is to drive the special interests out of our public life.

REDIRECTED SCHOOL

Theme Chosen by Col. Roosevelt For Teachers' Meeting Speech

DES MOINES, FRIDAY, NOV. 4

Branch of His Farm Commission Work Will Be Subject of His Address—Ten Thousand Teachers Expected.

Colonel Roosevelt will arrive in Des Moines Friday evening, Nov. 4, at 6:18 and will speak before the Iowa State Teachers' association.

He will arrive in Davenport that morning at 2:35 and speak at a political meeting for Charles Grilk, candidate for congress, in the forenoon.

He will leave Davenport at 1:45 p. m. and probably will speak at intermediate points.

Des Moines, Sept. 3.—It is learned that Colonel Roosevelt, in his address to the teachers of Iowa in Des Moines in November, will discuss the re-directed school as recommended by his country life commission.

It is expected that 10,000 teachers will be present at the association meeting in November.

The desirability of a discussion of the redirected school was suggested to Colonel Roosevelt, who said that he would be delighted to discuss it and in accordance therewith he is preparing an address along that line, several days having been spent by prominent Iowa educators in collecting the material relating to the Iowa feature of the subject.

The 1910 session of the Iowa Teachers' association will be the most important and probably the best attended session ever held in Iowa. Mr. Kern, author of "Among Country Schools," is a very able man and will speak also on the redirected and revitalized school. Mr. Bishop, state superintendent of Nebraska, will also be here. He is the leading boys' and girls' club organizer and he will tell something of how it is done. He is going to be at Ames next year.

Mrs. Huftalen of Page county is going to have charge of the rural school section and of the rural school exhibit. A. D. Cromwell of Humboldt will have charge of the agricultural exhibit. The exhibits are something new as the association never has had exhibits before.

STATE'S GREAT FAIR CLOSES

Iowa's Fifty-Sixth Annual Exposition Surpasses All Previous. Records.

Des Moines, Sept. 3.—Ooutdistancing last year's exposition in every respect, the fifty-sixth annual state fair came to a close last night.

In gate receipts, in attendance, in quality in every department and size in most, this year's display far eclipsed the fair of 1909.

When the gates were thrown open at 4 o'clock yesterday afternoon and the last paid admission was taken in, the total attendance during the fair had reached the 231,233 mark, or an increase of 18,633 over the fair of 1909.

At the close of business Friday night the total receipts for the 1910 fair were $151,739.86, as against $137,340.67 one year ago, showing an increase of $14,399.19. Friday's receipts were $11,998.07, as against $9,063.10 of Friday one year ago, making an increase of $2,934.07.

Two Badly Injured in Auto Accident.

Des Moines, Sept. 3.—Mrs. W. R. Crow of Shenandoah, and Mrs C. B. Cutter of Coin, probably were fatally injurfed at Greenwood park when an automobile containing the two women end their husbands dashed backwards down an embankment and turned turtle in the ditch. The men of the party were not seriously injured.

Dealers Demand More Money for Coal

Des Moines, Sept. 3.—Des Moines and Iowa today face a coal shortage which promises to become more serious as cold weather approaches, due to labor strikes in other parts of the country. Soft coal Thursday began retailing at $3.75 a ton in this city, an unusual price for this time of the year and higher than the average price in mid-winter.

Dolliver Pays Tribute to Roosevelt.

Omaha, Neb., Sept. 3—Eight thousand people in the auditorium here were stirred to a rare pitch of enthusiasm when Senator Jonathan P. Dolliver of Iowa, the most eloquent of the senate progressives, and, as many believe, the ablest orator in congress, spoke out in tribute to Roosevelt.

HERE THE IDEAL LUNCHEON

Diet of Italian Laborers Has Given a Valuable Idea to One Housekeeper.

"Watch the luncheons of Italian laborers if you want pointers on ideal hot weather meals," said a domestic science teacher whose windows overlook a street where many Italians have recently been employed. "Every day at noon I settle myself at a window and watch each man as he opens his lunch package.

"Nine out of ten of these luncheons are made up of some fresh green thing like lettuce or radishes or perhaps tomatoes, with brown bread and cheese. What could be better than this viewed from a scientific standpoint? The brown bread and cheese give nourishment and the fresh, green vegetables provide the refreshment.

"The tomato is bitten into as you would eat an apple or a pear. In the other hand the luncher holds his slice of brown bread spread with cheese, but alternates bites from each hand. The melon he cuts in crescent shaped pieces with his pocket knife and gnaws the pulp of each piece close down to the rind. Of course, it isn't cold, but what does he care?

"The lettuce is not separated into leaves and eaten little by little, not at all. The young Italian workman bites into the head of lettuce just as he did into the raw tomato and munches the leaves slowly, as he takes occasional mouthfuls of the brown bread in his other hand.

"Once in a great while the care of some mother, sister or wife is evidenced by a little bowl or cup of cold macaroni or spaghetti, but this is a great exception. The rule is fruit, fresh green vegetables and brown bread and cheese."

Small papier-mache tubs are the best "dishpans," if you have fine china to be kept without a chip.

If a turkey or chicken is rubbed inside and out with lemon it will make the meat white, juicy and tender.

A strip of emery cloth tacked to a small square board will be found useful for quickly sharpening the carving knife.

Be sure to iron garments with the straight of the goods and thus prevent stretching of the bias seams.

All woodwork and furniture to be treated to a coat of white enamel should be sandpapered first, that a streaked effect may be prevented.

If you have splashed ink on a mahogany desk try this: Dilute half a teaspoonful of oil of vitriol with a tablespoonful or more of water and apply with a feather or soft brush. Then wipe the spot with a damp cloth after the stain has been taken out.

Patches to Which Boys Won't Object.

To mend the knees of little boys' trousers so they will look as well and wear as well as when new, rip the seams as far up as worn, cut away the worn part, take a piece of cloth like the garment, sew straight across the front, carefully matching goods; press the seam well, then shape by the piece cut off, sew up the seams and hem across the front.

If the pressing is well done one could not tell they had been mended.

Chicken Gallosch.

Cut into dice two medium-sized raw potatoes. Put into a frying pan two tablespoonfuls olive oil, and when hot add the potato dice. Stir to keep from burning and cook five minutes. Then add a dash of paprika, a cupful of boiling water, a crushed clove of garlic, a cup of cold chicken chopped fine, or a can of boned chicken, and salt to taste. Cover and cook until the potatoes are done, stirring frequently.

Peas With Eggs.

Peas are delicious when served as a filling for an omelet, but they are also palatable when they are combined with scrambled eggs. To cook them in this way, reheat the peas, seasoning to taste, and adding a tablespoonful of minced parsley in addition to the butter, pepper, and salt. When thoroughly hot pour all the liquor from the peas, and over the latter pour two well beaten eggs, stirring continuously until they are properly scrambled. Serve on toast as quickly as possible.

Nice for Luncheon.

A cheese and rice dish that is nice for luncheon is prepared by cooking rice in equal parts of water and milk and when tender adding some grated cheese. For a cup of rice measured before cooking use about half a cupful of the cheese, or enough to give the dish a strong cheese flavor. To make the dish more substantial the rice and cheese may be spread in a thick mass over the bottom of a platter and poached eggs nicely seasoned with pepper and salt may be pinched upon it.

A STITCH IN TIME

Every form of cutaneous disease could be cured in its incipiency if a jar of Resinol Ointment were kept at hand. A little of this excellent Ointment applied in time will effectually ward off and cure a starting trouble which, if neglected, may prove a troublesome and often obstinate case of Eczema or other disfiguring skin disease. For burns, scalds, slight wounds, sores, eruption of poison ivy, sunburn, it is a quick and sure remedy, usually curing these troubles over night. To the unfortunate sufferer with Hemorrhoids (Itching or Inflamed Piles) resinol ointment is indeed a godsend. The intense pain and intolerable itching of this trouble is instantaneously relieved and a cure effected in a very short time.

The bath room or family medicine case is incomplete if not equipped with Resinol Soap and Ointment. They are most valuable accessories in every well regulated household, and can be obtained at any drug store.

Resinol Medicated Shaving Stick is also highly appreciated by men who regard a good complexion and a face free from pimples and blotches.

A Shipping Error.

The young Duchess of Westminster, wife of the richest peer in England, recently gave birth to her third child, a daughter. Thus there is no heir to the immense Grosvenor fortune, Earl Grosvenor, the duchess' second child, having died at the age of four.

Apropos of all this, a rather cruel story is being told in Newport about Lady Ursula Grosvenor, the eight-year-old daughter of the young duchess.

A friend, the story goes, called at Eaton Hall, and as she sat in the drawing-room, little Lady Ursula entered.

"Oh, good afternoon," she said gravely. "Mamma can't see any one today. She's upstairs with the new baby. They sent her, you know, a girl when she'd ordered a boy, and she's so upset that she's quite ill."

Globular Lightning.

Yesterday the inhabitants of Lewisham were provided with a specimen of that curious phenomenon known as "globular lightning." It is what is commonly called the "fire ball," and as it persists for several seconds it is obviously of a totally different character from any other form of lightning. It is much less brilliant than ordinary lightning, and its brightness appears to be that of iron at the "red hot" stage.

It is not, as some accounts might lead one to infer, a solid missile, but it is always spherical and appears to fall from a thunder cloud by its own gravity, sometimes rebounding after striking the ground.—London Globe.

"NO FRILLS"

Just Sensible Food Cured Him.

Sometimes a good, healthy commercial traveler suffers from poorly selected food and is lucky if he learns that Grape-Nuts food will put him right.

A Cincinnati traveler says: "About a year ago my stomach got in a bad way. I had a headache most of the time and suffered misery. For several months I ran down until I lost about 40 pounds in weight and finally had to give up a good position and go home. Any food that I might use seemed to nauseate me.

"My wife, hardly knowing what to do, one day brought home a package of Grape-Nuts food and coaxed me to try it. I told her it was no use but finally to humor her I tried a little, and they just struck my taste. It was the first food I had eaten in nearly a year that did not cause any suffering.

"Well, to make a long story short, I began to improve and stuck to Grape-Nuts. I went up from 135 pounds in December to 194 pounds the following October.

"My brain is clear, blood all right and appetite too much for any man's pocketbook. In fact, I am thoroughly made over, and owe it all to Grape-Nuts. I talk so much about what Grape-Nuts will do that some of the men on the road have nicknamed me 'Grape-Nuts,' but I stand today a healthy, rosy-cheeked man—a pretty good example of what the right kind of food will do.

"You can publish this if you want to. It is a true statement without any frills."

Read the little book, "The Road to Wellville," in pkgs. "There's a Reason."

Ever read the above letter? A new one appears from time to time. They are genuine, true, and full of human interest.

Try to Come Back.

Not long ago Lord Kinnard, who is always actively interested in religious work, paid a surprise visit to a mission school in the east end of London and told a class of boys the story of Samson. Introducing his narrative, his lordship added:

"He was strong, became weak, and then regained his strength, enabling him to destroy his enemies. Now, boys, if I had an enemy, what would you advise me to do?"

A little boy, after meditating on the secret of that great giant's strength, shot up his hand and exclaimed: "Get a bottle of hair restorer."

Strong Healthy Women

If a woman is strong and healthy in a womanly way, motherhood means to her but little suffering. The trouble lies in the fact that the many women suffer from weakness and disease of the distinctly feminine organism and are unfitted for motherhood. This can be remedied.

Dr. Pierce's Favorite Prescription

Cures the weaknesses and disorders of women. It acts directly on the delicate and important organs concerned in motherhood, making them healthy, strong, vigorous, virile and elastic.

"Favorite Prescription" banishes the indispositions of the period of expectancy and makes baby's advent easy and almost painless. It quickens and vitalizes the feminine organs, and insures a healthy and robust baby. Thousands of women have testified to its marvelous merits.

It Makes Weak Women Strong. It Makes Sick Women Well.

WESTERN CANADA'S 1910 CROPS

160 ACRE FARMS IN WESTERN CANADA FREE

Wheat Yield in Many Districts Will Be From 25 to 35 Bushels Per Acre

Land sales and homestead entries increasing. No cessation in numbers going from United States. Wonderful opportunities remain for those who intend making Canada their home. New districts being opened up for settlement. Many farmers will net, this year, $10 to $15 per acre from their wheat crop. All the advantages of old settled countries are there. Good schools, churches, splendid markets, excellent railway facilities. See the grain exhibit at the different State and some of the County fairs.

Letters similar to the following are received every day, testifying to satisfactory conditions; other districts are as favorably spoken of:

THEY SENT FOR THEIR SON.

Maidstone, Sask., Canada, Aug. 5th, 1910.

"My parents came here from Cedar Falls, Iowa, four years ago, and were so well pleased with this country they sent to Coeur d'Alene for me. I have taken up a homestead near them, and am perfectly satisfied to stop here." Leonard Douglas.

WANTS SETTLER'S RATE FOR HIS STOCK.

Stettler, Alberta, July 31st, 1910.

"Well I got up here from Forest City, Iowa, last Spring in good shape with the stock and everything. Now, I have got two boys back in Iowa yet, and I am going back there now soon to get them and another car up here this fall. What I would like to know is, if there is any chance to get a cheap rate back again, and when we return to Canada I will call at your office for our certificates."

Yours truly, H. A. Wik.

WILL MAKE HIS HOME IN CANADA.

Brainerd, Minn., Aug. 1st, 1910.

"I am going to Canada a week from today and intend to make my home there. My husband has been there six weeks and is well pleased with the country; so he wants me to come as soon as possible. He filed on a claim near Landis, Sask., and by his description of it it must be a pretty place. My brother-in-law, Mr. Frank J. Zimmer, lives there and it was through him that we decided to locate in Canada."

Yours truly, Mrs. Richard Henry Ebinger.

TAKES HIS BROTHER-IN-LAW'S WORD FOR IT.

Taylors Falls, Minn., Aug. 7, 1910.

"I shall go to Camrose this Fall with my cattle and household goods. I got a poor crop here this year and my brother-in-law, Axel Nordstrom in Camrose, wants me to come there. He formerly lived in Wilton, North Dakota. I am going to buy or take homestead when I get there, but I do not want to travel two times there, for I take my brother-in-law's word about the country, and want to get your low rate."

Yours truly Peter A. Nelson.

WANTS TO RETURN TO CANADA.

Vesta, Minn., July 24th, 1910

"I went to Canada nine years ago and took up a quarter section of railroad land and a homestead, but my boys have never taken up any land yet. I still hold the railroad land. I had to come back to the states on account of my health. Please let me know at once if I can get the cheap rates to Ponoka, Alberta."

Yours truly, Geo. Paskewitz, Vesta, Minn.

AN AMERICAN KING

A Romantic and Well-Nigh Forgotten Incident in American History Recalled in "The Courage of Captain Plum," Our New Serial by James Oliver Curwood.

On the curving shore of Beaver island, not far from Mackinac, in Lake Michigan, an irregular row of low cabins struggles along a single street of deep and drifting sand. Here a few dwellings, three or four stores and warehouses, and several cooper shops form a hamlet, which is clothed by law with the dignity of a county seat. This is St. James, where once a "Royal Press" executed kingly commands, and its name preserves the self-canonization of one who founded and maintained in the United States a monarchy absolute during its brief term and within its narrow and isolated limits—an imperium in imperio in democratic America.

The king of Beaver island in his plebeian days bore the name of James Jesse Strang. He was the son of a sturdy farmer of Cayuga county, New York. As a young man he is described as possessing eccentric ideas and a voluble tongue, and as being entirely reputable in life, with large confidence in his own capacity, and morbidly anxious for distinction. In 1843 he was caught in the tide of western emigration and borne to Burlington, Wis. Not long before Joseph Smith had founded on the banks of the Mississippi the Mormon city of Nauvoo, and was welcoming young men of energy and plausible speech to spiritual blessings and earthly honors. Strang felt this influence, was baptized into the church on February 25, 1844, and became an elder less than ten days after.

When Joseph Smith was murdered by the mob that stormed the Carthage jail, Strang laid claim to the succession, and exhibited what purported to be an autograph letter from Smith dated nine days before "the martyrdom of Joseph," in which his heirship was declared. The officers of the church at once proclaimed the letter a clumsy forgery and drove Strang from Nauvoo as a presumptuous impostor. So he started things on his own hook, founding the city of Voree, in Wisconsin, and organizing the community on a socialistic basis. Thence the colony migrated in 1846 to Beaver island, and the socialistic community ended in a monarchy. Strang was proclaimed king, established a "Royal Press," took unto himself five wives, allowed three to each of his followers, made all the women wear bloomers and short skirts, prohibited tea, coffee, tobacco and liquor, and ruled with a high hand generally. His tyranny was the cause of his own downfall. Two of his followers, whom he had horsewhipped, shot him in the head.

Mr. Curwood makes King Strang the central figure of The Courage of Captain Plum, which will appear in this paper in serial form.

FARM ORGANIZATION

Dr. Hibbaod, of Agricultural College, Makes Plea

WOULD PROMOTE SOCIAL LIFE

States that Movement of Farm Boys and Girls Into the Cities is Detrimental to the Entire State of Iowa.

Des Moines, Sept. 3.—That the movement of young men and women from the country into the towns and cities is harming Iowa and can only be stopped by the formation of farmer's clubs was the principal point brought out by Dr. H. B. Hibbard of Ames in an address on "Farmers' Organizations," delivered in the lecture room of the state agricultural college building at the state fair. The lecture was attended by a crowd of fair visitors who received Dr. Hibbard's words with enthusiasm.

Dr. Hibbard pleaded for farmer's organizations, not for the purpose of saving money, but to promote social life on the farm. He declared that at the present time the young people of the farm live lives barren of social amusments and have to go to the towns and cities for their pleasure.

The grange was pointed to by Dr. Hibbard as being the only farmers' organization that ever succeeded in helping the farmer socially. He regretted the decline of the granges and pleaded that they be revived in the state.

"The Iowa State grange did more in its time for the people than any other organizations ever formed," he said. "Through its efforts, coupled with the efforts of other state granges mutual insurance was started, railroad regulation by commission was inaugurated, and rural free delivery and the postal savings banks had their inception."

Dr. Hibbard declared that he considered the postal savings banks useless and stated that a parcels post would do far more good for the farmers of the country and state.

"What the farmers of today need is organization," he said. "Unless they speedily organize they will be bettered by the business men and professional men of the country. If they form clubs of some kind or granges, social centers will be formed where the farmers and their families may gather and discuss their needs, where lectures on popular topics may be heard and where the country people may enjoy themselves after their hard labor."

The Iowa League of Commercial clubs was founded at a convention held in the Press Club rooms in Des Moines. The purpose of the organization is to boost Iowa, discourage migration, keep Iowa money in Iowa and encourage intensified farming by which the soil will be made to increase its production.

The last paragraph of the document read: "Before taking my remains from the church, and after the sermon, it is my request that the entire assembly sing with a spirit of patriotism the grand old song, 'America.' May no harm ever come to my country and my flag." The requests were complied with to the letter.

SERIAL STORY

THE LITTLE BROWN JUG AT KILDARE

By MEREDITH NICHOLSON

Illustrations By RAY WALTERS

Copyright 1908 by The Bobbs-Merrill Company.

SYNOPSIS.

Thomas Ardmore and Henry Maine would stumble upon intrigue when the governors of North and South Carolina reported to have quarreled. Griswold with himself with Barbara Osborne, daughter of the governor of South Carolina, while Ardmore espouses the cause of Jerry Dangerfield, daughter of the governor of North Carolina. These two ladies are trying to fill the shoes of their fathers, while the latter are missing. Both states are in a turmoil over one Appleweight, an outlaw with great political influence. Unaware of each other's position both Griswold and Ardmore set out to take the other prosecute. Both have been scouting the border. Griswold captures Appleweight, but Jerry finds him and takes him to Ardsley, her own prisoner. Ardmore arrests a man on his party who says he is Gov. Osborne. Meanwhile another man is arrested as Appleweight by the South Carolina militia. The North Carolina militia is called into action. When Col. Gillingwater, Jerry's fiance, finds that real war is on, he flees. Appleweight is taken secretly by Ardmore and lodged in a jail in South Carolina. Returning to Ardsley, Ardmore finds that Billings, the banker, and Foster, treasurer of North Carolina, have been arrested. Barbara Osborne arrives at Ardsley. Dispute as to who has the real Appleweight results in the identification of the man jailed by Ardmore in South Carolina as the outlaw and that Griswold's prisoner is Gov. Dangerfield of North Carolina. It develops that the two governors are on the most friendly terms, and had retired together to the line of the border, for a rest from the cares of state.

CHAPTER XIX.—Continued.

"No!" cried Jerry. "We shall do nothing of the kind! I met Mr. Appleweight under peculiar circumstances, but I must say that I formed a high opinion of his chivalry and I think that we allow him to take a little trip somewhere until the Woman's Civic League of Raleigh and the carping Massachusetts press have found other business, and he can return in peace to his home."

"That," said Gov. Osborne, "meets my approval."

Two more prisoners were now brought in.

"Gov. Dangerfield," continued Ardmore, "here is your state treasurer, who had sought to injure you by defaulting the state bonds due to-day, which is the first of June. And that shifty person with Mr. Foster is Secretary Billings of the Bronx Loan & Trust Company, who has treated me many times with the greatest injustice and condescension. Whether Treasurer Foster has the money with which to meet those bonds I do not know; but I do know that I have to-day paid them in full through the Buckhaw National bank of Raleigh."

Col. Daubenspeck leaped to his feet and swung his cap. He proposed three cheers for Jerry Dangerfield; and three more for Barbara Osborne; and when the two governors were cheered three times three; and when the bungalow had ceased to ring, it was seen that Ardmore and Griswold were in each other's arms.

"Surely, by this time," said Mrs. Atchison, "you have adjusted enough of these weighty matters for one day, and I beg that you will all dine with us at Ardsley to-night at eight o'clock, where my brother and I will endeavor to mark in appropriate fashion the beginning of peace between your neighboring kingdoms."

"For Gov. Osborne and myself I accept, madam," replied Gov. Dangerfield, "providing the flowing frock-coats, which are the vesture and symbol of our respective offices, are still in the log house on the Raccoon where I became a prisoner."

CHAPTER XX.

Good-By to Jerry Dangerfield.

The next morning Ardmore knocked at Griswold's door as early as he dared, and went in and talked to his friend in their old intimate fashion. The associate professor of admiralty was shaving himself with care.

"You won't have any hard feelings about that scarlet fever business, will you, Grissy? It was downright selfish of me to want to keep the thing to myself, but I thought it would be fun to go ahead and carry it through and then show you how well I pulled it off."

"Don't ever refer to it again, if you love me," spluttered Griswold, amiably, as he washed off the lather. "I, also, have ruled over a kingdom, and I have seen history in the making, quorum pars magna fui."

"But I say, Grissy, there is such a thing as fate and destiny and all that after all; don't you believe it?"

"Don't I believe it! I know it!" thundered Griswold, reaching for a towel. He lifted a white rose from a glass of water where it had spent the night and regarded it tenderly. "The right rose under the right star, and the thing's done; the rose, the star and the girl—the combination simply can't be beat, Ardy."

Ardmore seized and wrung his friend's hand for the twentieth time; but he was preoccupied, and Griswold, fastening his collar at the mirror, hummed softly the couplet:

With the winking eye
For my battle-cry.

"Grissy!" shouted Ardmore, "she never did it!"

"Oh—bless my soul, what was I saying! Why, of course she wasn't the one! Not Miss Dangerfield—never!"

"Well, you like her, don't you?" demanded Ardmore, petulantly.

"Of course I like her, you idiot! She's wonderful. She's—"

He frowned upon the scarf he had chosen with much care, snapped it to shake the wrinkles out, humming softly, while Ardmore glared at him.

"She's wise," Griswold resumed, "with the wisdom of laughter—accept that, with my compliments. It's not often I do so well before breakfast. And now if you're to be congratulated before I go back to the groves of Academe pray bestir yourself. At this very moment I have an engagement to walk with a lady before breakfast—thanks, yes, that's my coat. Good-by!"

Breakfast was a lingering affair at Ardsley that morning. The two governors and the National Guard officers who had spent the night in the house were not in the slightest hurry to break up the party, for such a company, they all knew, could hardly be assembled again. The governors were a trifle nervous as to the attitude of the press, in spite of Collins' efforts to dictate what history should say of the affair on the Raccoon; but before they left the table the Raleigh morning papers were brought in and it was clear that the newspaper men were keeping their contract.

Studied That Trifle of a Hand.

Both governors had decided upon an inspection of such portions of their militia as were assembled on the Raccoon, and a joint dress parade was appointed for six o'clock.

Ardmore, anxious to make every one at home, saw the morning pass without a chance to speak to Jerry; and when he was free shortly before noon he was chagrined to find that she had gone for a ride over the estate with her father, Gov. Osborne, Barbara and Griswold. He went in pursuit, and to his delight found her presently sitting alone on a log by the Raccoon, having dismounted, it appeared, to rescue a fledgling robin whose cries had led her away from her companions. She pointed out the nest and directed him to climb the tree and restore the bird. This done he sat down beside her at a point where the Raccoon curved sweepingly and swung off abruptly into a new course.

"I hope your father didn't scold you for anything we did," he began, meekly.

"No; he took it all pretty well, and promised that if I wouldn't tell mamma what he had been doing—about coming down here with Gov. Osborne just to settle an old score at poker—mamma doesn't approve of cards, you know—that he would make me a present of a better riding horse than the one I now have, and he might even consider a trip abroad next summer."

"Oh, you mustn't go abroad! It's—it's so lonesome abroad!"

"How perfectly ridiculous! Has it never occurred to you that I am never lonesome, not even when I'm alone."

"Well," said Ardmore, who saw that he was headed for a blind alley, "I'm glad your father was not displeased with our work. It's a good thing all this fuss about the Appleweight people is over or I should be worse than silly. My mind was not intended for such heavy work."

"I think you have a good mind, Mr. Ardmore," said Jerry, with the air of one who makes concessions. "You really did well in all these troubles, and you did much better than I thought you would the day I hired you for private secretary. I think I could safely recommend you to any governor in need of assistance."

"You talk as though you were getting ready to discharge me," said Ardmore, plaintively, "and I don't want to lose my job."

"You ought to have something to do," said Jerry, thoughtfully. "As near as I can make out you have never done anything but study about pirates and collect pernicious books on the sinful life of Capt. Kidd. You should have some larger aim in life than that and I think I know of a good position that is now open, or will be as soon as papa has cleared out the peanut shells we left in his desk. I think you would make an excellent adjutant general with full charge of the state militia."

"But you have to get rid of Gillingwater first," suggested Ardmore, his heart beating fast.

"If you mean that he has to be removed from office, I will tell you now, Mr. Ardmore, that Rutherford Gillingwater will no longer sign himself adjutant general of North Carolina. I removed him myself in a general order I wrote yesterday afternoon just before I told papa that you and I could not act as governor any longer, but that he must resume the yoke."

"But that must have been a matter of considerable delicacy, Miss Dangerfield, when you consider that you are engaged to marry Mr. Gillingwater."

"Not in the least," said Jerry. "I broke our engagement the moment I saw that he came here the other night all dressed up to eat and not to fight, and he is now free to engage himself to that thin blonde at Goldsboro whom he thinks so highly intellectual."

Jerry held up her left hand and regarded its ringless fingers judicially, while Ardmore, his heart racing hotly against all records, watched her, and with a particular covetousness his eyes studied that trifle of a hand.

Then with a quick gesture he seized her hand and raised her gently to her feet.

"Jerry!" he cried. "From the moment you winked at me I have loved you. I should have followed you round the world until I found you. If you can marry a worthless wretch like me, if—oh, Jerry!"

She gently freed her hand and stepped to one side, bending her head like a bird that pauses alarmed, or uncertain of its whereabouts, glancing cautiously up and down the creek.

"Mr. Ardmore," she said, "you may not be aware that when you asked me to be your wife—and that, I take it, was your intention—you were standing in South Carolina, while I stood with both feet on the sacred soil of the Old North State. Under the circumstances I do not think your proposal is legal. Moreover, unless you are quite positive which eye it was that so far forgot itself as to wink, I do not think the matter can go further."

The slightest suggestion of a smile played about her lips, but he was very deeply troubled, and, seeing this, her eyes grew grave with kindness.

"Mr. Ardmore, if your muscles of locomotion have not been utterly paralyzed, and if you will leave that particular state of the union which, next to Massachusetts, I most deeply abhor, I will do what I can in my poor weak way—as father says in beginning his best speeches—to assist you to the answer."

Then for many aeons, when he had his arms about her, a kiss, which he had intended for the lips that were so near, somehow failed of its destination, and fell upon what seemed to him a rose-leaf gone to Heaven, but which was, in fact, Jerry Dangerfield's left eye. His being tingled with the most delicious of intoxications, to which the clasp of her arms about his neck added unnecessary though not unwelcome delight. Then she drew back and held him away with her finger-tips for an instant.

"Mr. Thomas Ardmore," she said, with maddening deliberation, "it might not be important, but I must tell you in all candor that it was the other eye."

THE END.

Gen. Knox's Carriage.

Frank B. Hills, first selectman of Thomaston, hitched up in front of the Rockland postoffice a day or two ago with a "pedigreed carriage"—the one in which Washington's first secretary of war used to ride. The carriage was built in Boston 130 years ago and was the private carriage of Maj. Gen. Henry Knox, secretary under the first president, and not only is it one of the most historic vehicles in the United States, but it is also probably the oldest able bodied private carriage in existence on the continent. In spite of its 130 years, a quaint substantial vehicle it is. Gen. Knox no doubt had it made, just as history tells it, in Boston, for there were no carriage builders in Thomaston in those early days, and as Gen. Knox operated a packet line of small sailing vessels between Boston and Thomaston it would have been easy for him to have the carriage brought to Thomaston.

Light, More Light.

If what Nikola Tesla says is true, there is booked for 1910 even a greater triumph in the physical world than the aerial flight of 1909. He says that he has practically perfected his invention of a "wireless electric light," with which, he says, it will be possible to light the whole United States, the current passing into the air and spreading in all directions, producing the effect of a strong aurora borealis. He declares that he can light isolated dwellings, though they be located 12,000 miles from his central plant. His lamps, he adds, are indestructible, and once provided, will never need to be repaired or renewed. If Mr. Tesla were only half as good in performance as he is in promises, what a benefactor of the human race he would be.

Drew the Line at That.

Stretcher—Yes, it's cold, but nothing like what it was at Christmas three years ago, when the steam from the engines froze hard and fell on to the line in sheets.

Cuffer—That wasn't so cold as in '87, when it froze the electricity in the telephone wires, and when the thaw came all the bally machines were talking as hard as they could for over five hours.

Bowlong—The coldest year that I can remember was in '84, when the policemen had to run to keep themselves warm.

But this was too much, and, with silent looks of indignation, the other two left the romancer to his own reflections.
